Captain J. L. M'LEAN, Late 43rd and 50th Reg. } Hon. Secs.
S. A. PERRY, Esq., Deputy Surveyor-General. }

I should have replied to your official letter long since, but the assembling of the General Committee has been deferred from time to time from various causes. The 18th instant, at 13, Waterloo Place, I laid your letter before the Committee, Lieutenant-General the Lord Saltoun in the chair; and I was then requested to return from the General Committee here, to your President, His Excellency Sir C. A. Fitz Roy, Colonel Snodgrass, yourselves, and Committee at New South Wales, the best thanks for your exertions, and for the subscriptions from so many gallant Officers, and the Colour Sergeant, late of the 52nd Regiment of Light Infantry, towards the Richmond testimonial, to be given to his Grace the Duke of Richmond, as a Peer, for advocating the claims of the veterans of all arms during the late great war, and for presenting their memorials for the gracious consideration of Her Majesty the Queen, for medals.
At the General Committee, the 18th instant, the design for the testimonial, which is most beautiful, was shown for the first time, by the firm of Messrs. Hunt, Peskell, and Co., and approved of (who will execute the testimonial in silver); but to have the addition of a British Grenadier, and a Royal Marine, with round hat as worn during the great war, added to the group of figuring.
It was further resolved, that the Duke of Richmond should be invited to attend the dinner and presentation, which was to take place the 21st of next June, the anniversary of the battle of Vittoria, fought in Spain, in 1813.
Since the Meeting of the General Committee Messrs. Hunt, Ruskell and Co., New Bond-street, London, have offered to present each officer subscribing to the fund with a Lithographic Print of the Testimonial; also, one to each District of Pensioners contributing to the List.
The total amount of money at the Bank up to this time is £1086 from about 4000 Generals, Admirals, Officers, and Pensioners of all Arms, including £50 from Germany, without any List of names, and thirteen Officers of the Brunswick Corps.
Captain J. Robb, Royal Navy, the Honorable Secretary for that service has been some months absent from London, otherwise he would have signed this letter with myself.
I have the honour to be, gentlemen,
Your obedient servant,
(Signed) JOHN H. COOKE,
2965 Major and Honorary Secretary.

MR. R. A. JOHNSON is requested to write or call at the Office of Messrs. G. Thorne and Co., 591, George-street, where he will hear of something to his advantage.

"Sworn to no Master, of no Sect am I."

CAPTAIN MORIARTY AND THE HAMLETS.

A fourth candidate has announced himself for the Hamlets. Captain Moriarty had been named as aspiring to legislative honours some days before his address appeared, but those acquainted with his pleasantrie regarded his threatened opposition as the effect of his recognised eccentricity. His address having been published, leaves no doubt now of his intentions, and that address we now notice.

After informing the Hamlets that Education shall ever receive his most "strenuous support," Captain Moriarty informs us, not that he is "the Cove of Cork," but that "he was educated in the mother country, and that his mind is formed by the consideration of the sterling character of her institutions." His address, however, is a libel on those who educated him; and though we will make every allowance for the fourth candidate for the Hamlets being a native of the Emerald Isle, we are certain that the pedagogue who had the honour of driving into him the elements of grammar, never exclaimed, "Moriarty, when your ambition leads you to become a politician and a senator, commence your address to a constituency in these words, "So many of you have expressed themselves favorable to my pretensions that I beg leave to announce myself as a Candidate for your suffrages at the approaching election for the Legislative Council." This, however, was the opening paragraph of Captain Moriarty's address. We may be charged with picking out a sentence in which it may be said that there are clerical errors, and that we are unnecessarily severe, as it was withdrawn after it had been once published. But what is the key to the following sentence, which occurs in the succeeding paragraph to that just quoted? "But believing that there is a sufficient number of your body who feel that the elective franchise is conferred, not as a private right to be used for private purposes, but as a delegated trust, to be exercised conscientiously for the benefit of all, remain unpledged to decide the election at the hustings, I will put the matter to the test." This extensive piece of unmitigated gibberish, of inexplicable jargon, we presume is intended to inform the electors that "Moriarty is the boy for them," the trustee of their rights, at their command. Such are specimens of the address of the would-be legislator, and if he had stopped here we should have done the same. But the Council as a body, without the exception of a single member, official, nominee, or representative, have incurred the displeasure of the gigantic soul of Moriarty, and the exalted tone which he assumes is not the least amusing of his address to the Hamlets. The morceau speaks for itself. "In the discussion of all these matters [what matters are alluded to, seems accidentally to have been omitted] differences of opinion must arise, but assuredly they [discussion] may be carried on with more regard to the amenities of social life than has [referring to they] characterised some of the proceedings of our late Legislative Council. It would be my wish to see and to uphold a more dignified tone, for I know not any subject that may not be investigated without resorting to personalities, or any argument not weakened by intemperance." Now what will the late members of the Legislative Council say to these expressions deliberately penned and coolly published. Captain Moriarty appears to forget that the very gist of debate is zeal; and during the eight years that the Council existed under the late Constitutional Act, we cannot see where what Captain Moriarty calls "the amenities of social life" have been disregarded. In the heat of debate a hasty expression may have escaped the lips of a member, but is Moriarty so cool, so collected, and possessed of so much control over his temper, that the same thing would not occur probably to him if he had a seat in the House. From our experience, such ebullitions of temper as he com lains of are comparatively rare. And we very much question whether the presence of a Moriarty would have the moral influence over a deliberative and Legislative Assembly which he so confidently anticipates.

Captain Moriarty promises the electors an "opportunity of ascertaining more precisely his sentiments than an address can effect," and thus concludes his letter to the electors in these emphatic words:—"Such generally are my views; should they, when fully understood, be such as the majority of you approve, if placed in the proud position of your representative, I will always advocate them with zeal and independence, and with the candour and courtesy of a gentleman." The first part of this last paragraph reminds us of a celebrated Bull of an Irish member of the House of Commons, who remarked that many members had acted nobly and liberally towards Ireland, and that "their names, though they were not known, would always be remembered with feelings of gratitude." In like manner, our Hibernian candidate speaks of his supposed views, his patriotic spirit scorning the trammels of orthography and common sense, in which men of less exalted enthusiasm and flowery sentiment are content to embody their language. His concluding promise to the electors is the climax to this most original, and we may add characteristic address. What! is Captain Moriarty's reputation for candour and courtesy at such a discount that he feels it necessary to pledge himself in writing to his constituents that, whilst advocating their interests, he will not depart from that urbanity which is allowed, as a matter of course, to form the basis of the public and private actions of every gentleman? Hitherto it has been with his address, and not with himself, we have had to do! although we do intend presently to consider his claims as a man, and as an officer under Government, appealing for legislative honour. Captain Moriarty anticipates that his sentiments may not be perfectly intelligible to the Hamlets; in this we concur, and we may add that we prefer an address explicitly penned, to one filled with unintelligible and mysterious expressions; although, as a specimen of what can be done in rivalling, if not surpassing, Bombastes Furioso in the ludicrous pomposity of its language, and exaggerated tone of patriotism which prevails throughout, we consider the address as unique and perfect of its kind, and only fear that the inhabitants of the Sydney Hamlets will not appreciate its exquisite absurdity, but will be unreasonable enough to prefer a straightforward and matter-of-fact explanation of ideas, to the flowers of rhetoric in which our Harbour-master prefers to indulge. However, Captain Moriarty has intimated his intention of personally addressing the electors, when we may perhaps be able to gather more from his lips than it is possible to do from his pen; at present his political principles are enveloped in mystery,—and we would advise Captain Moriarty, the next time he comes forward as a public character, to confine the high flights of his imagination to the limits of common sense, more suited to the comprehension of the major part of the inhabitants of "this dull earth of ours."

We will now proceed to consider Captain Moriarty's qualifications in a political point of view. Although, in his address he talks of independence, we cannot help mentioning the fact that he is our Harbour-master and derives an income from the Government. We have given extracts from Captain Moriarty's address because the address of a candidate soliciting constituents to place him as their representative in the Legislature ought to be some criterion of the candidate's fitness as a member of Council. By an address we can sometimes fathom a man's mind and estimate his pretensions; by such means we are guided to the calibre of the candidate's qualifications, and can form some idea as to whether he possesses the necessary educational acquirements to be able to assist in debate, and legislate for the colony.

With three candidates in the field for the Sydney Hamlets, and the constituency canvassed and almost pledged to a man, little did we expect that Captain Moriarty would appear in the field at the eleventh hour as a fourth candidate; he has, however, done so.

If our Legislative Council were composed altogether of representative members, if nomineeism were abolished, and Government officials took their seats as representative members, we then could have no right to object to officers of the Government coming for legislative honours; in short, we do not complain of it now, as it is open to a constituency to elect a Government officer if it should think fit; but we would ask, with one-third of the Council nominated by the Government, would it be prudent or politic to throw more power or more strength into the hands of the Government than it enjoys under the present Constitutional Act? And finally we would ask, would the return of Captain Moriarty strengthen the hands of the Government, or place an uncompromising and independent representative member in the Council? Let the unpledged electors pause before they pledge themselves to vote for him and promise him their support, and let them have a more explicit statement of his views and political opinions.

The papers received from Melbourne yesterday appear to lead to the conclusion that a gold field had been discovered. We know, however, that when the productions of Victoria are concerned, the enthusiasm of our southern contemporaries is so great, that it is only with extreme caution their statements can be received. Some small grains of gold had been discovered at "Chinie's Creek," and many persons were working; but with what success we cannot ascertain. The next news from Melbourne (which will not arrive till next Tuesday) will be looked for with great interest.

Although the news by the arrivals of yesterday is no later than that previously received by the way of India, we have devoted a large portion of our space to extracts from our files of London papers. Several articles and reports are omitted in order to make room for as many extracts as possible.

The Supplement to this morning's Herald contains the Goulburn Assize Intelligence; the latest City Article, and other English Extracts, and miscellaneous advertisements.

[FROM OUR LONDON CORRESPONDENT.]

London, 7th April, 1851.

The discussion on the Military Estimates last week produced some references to the strength of the Military Establishment of New South Wales. There is little difference in the views of the Government and the radical economists on this subject; and it has been well observed by one of the morning journals, that the reduction of the force in your colony to its standard, as contemplated for the future is, in fact, the withdrawal of New South Wales from the military protection of Great Britain.

The Cape Affairs continue to engross much attention, both in and out of Parliament, not only from the interest attaching to the critical position of our armed force on the Caffre frontier, but from the very palpable relation of cause and effect between Caffre hostilities and the non-reduction of our financial burthens. The demands for public retrenchment are at the present moment more resolute and energetic than at any former period; the Government itself, in a great degree, participating in the movement; and here comes this untoward "little war" in South Africa to derange the whole ministerial scheme of economy and amended taxation. The Chancellor of the Exchequer's new budget is received as a great improvement on his former one, but his references to the unascertainable amount of Cape disbursements show how problematical any future surplus has become, and how impossible it may be to meet any further demands for the diminution of particular imposts, or the adoption of a more equitable system in apportioning the incidence of taxation. Between conflicting motives, however, it is gratifying to find the Government, in this instance, taking its stand on the high grounds of national honour and generosity. On Friday night, the Chancellor of the Exchequer, in the course of his long speech on the Amended Budget, observed as follows:—"Sir, I am quite aware that a loud demand has been made for the unconditional repeal of the window tax. (Hear, hear.) Well, I think it is enough for me to say that the amount of the window duty is £1,856,000, and the probable surplus, £1,892,000. And if, therefore, I assented to that request, I would leave myself a margin of £40,000. And if I add to the expenditure the least possible demand for the Caffre war, (oh, oh),—Do honorable gentlemen suppose that country is to suffer its subjects to be slaughtered, and is not to defend those who have gone out on the faith of our protection, (Hear, hear),—that we are not to protect British subjects in a distant land? If they do, I think, they are not likely to meet with the concurrence of the majority of this House." (Hear, hear.) This was language becoming an English minister, but I question if the protection of any colonial interest was ever forced into such direct and glaring opposition to popular demands and interests before. The concurrence of events at this particular juncture is singularly unpropitious.

There is said to be a very active effort being made at this moment by persons connected with the Swan River colony to induce the Government to send out all their disposable convicts, male and female, to that quarter. These individuals have visions of great pecuniary prosperity being suddenly diffused over that hitherto pauperised settlement, by the large convict expenditure which would result from sending there some 3000 or 4000 convicts of both sexes annually; and they reckon on the great additional advantages of good roads being constructed for them, and breakwaters erected in their roadsteads. Probably as a young settlement, which has yet to be made into a colony, there may be advantages in a large influx of convicts. Whether these can be put into competition with the moral evils of such a mode of planting colonies is another question. I should doubt, however, whether the Government will be very ready to meet these demands. It would require on a sudden an extensive official organization, and our Government have a great idea of slowly feeling their way when obliged to quit the beaten track. At the same time, I have no doubt if they find the Western Australian experiment to answer, they will gladly avail themselves of the opportunity of getting rid of as many of their convicts in that quarter as possible; and, perhaps, we may yet see the western shores of the Australian Continent becoming for a period the standing receptacle for all British criminals, as Eastern Australia had been. As for any colony being permanently a penal settlement for any mother country, they must shut their eyes to the inevitable progression of human society who expect such a thing. And our Government would exercise a wise discretion if they rather anticipated the natural dissolution of that relationship, than endeavoured, by a misled policy of wheedling and intimidation, to retain colonies in such a connexion after they had once declared against it.

This evening, Mr. Herries' motion may again place the Government in jeopardy; but I think we may discover signs of a better understanding between Whigs and Radicals.

The meeting held in Sydney, in November, for the purpose of establishing Church of England missions, at which all the Australian Bishops were present, has produced a long letter from a correspondent to the Morning Chronicle, in Saturday's number of that journal. This communication is, perhaps, chiefly deserving of your attention from the peculiar position which the Morning Chronicle, as the organ of the Gladstone Church party, holds in the various ecclesiastical disputes of the day.

Some expressions in one of Mr. Godley's recent letters have been held to imply that he rather thinks himself "a cut above" his fellow-colonists in the item of gentility; and may rather damage the estimate in which he has been held as the leader of that band of brothers who emigrated to Canterbury.

London, April 12.

Sir William Molesworth's motion on the Civil and Military Expenditure of Great Britain in our Colonial Possessions, the terms of which I gave you in my letter of the 6th ultimo, came on for discussion the evening before last. It was introduced by a speech of unusual length, displaying very laborious investigation, great skill in the arrangement of topics, and more heartiness of style than the honorable baronet has been hitherto remarkable for in his oratorical efforts. But the tone of the debate generally, as well as of Sir William's speech in particular, was precisely of the character which I had anticipated, and which I imagine the tenor of my later communications will have prepared you for. The parliamentary feeling of the day is not, I fear, even on the average a favourable one to the colonies. At best it is one of indifferentism. While the active men of the Liberal party would, I am satisfied, not go to the expense of a shilling, either to create a new colony or to preserve an old one.

At the same time I think it will be generally owned, even by colonists, that a great deal of Sir William Molesworth's able speech could be justified. The great omission of the men of Sir William's school in their estimate of the value of colonies is, that they overlook the great field which our colonies afford for the future expansion of our overflowing populace. It is surely something for this swarming island of ours to secure vacant continents for the reception of millions of our countrymen, and for the creation of an immense future trade between us and them? We may admit that a British colony, once fairly established, an intercourse of commerce between it and the parent State will in all probability continue unimpaired after existing political ties are severed. But the colony must have an origin; and the appropriation of wide regions to people of our race, is worth some little national "expenditure," one would think, even in the estimate of a Cobden. Still the question may fairly be asked by the warmest advocates of colonization, whether this expenditure has not been sometimes carried beyond all reasonable bounds, and whether our frontier possessions of Caffraria, and our coast occupations in New Zealand, are not after all very dear bargains?

The fault of Sir William's address was the one almost natural to the man of enlarged philosophical views, who has never been called upon to prove his theories. He made not sufficient allowances for the specialties and the exceptions which constantly press themselves on the practical statesman. Yet this is a fault of which I think I can discern that Sir William is fast ridding himself; and his speech of Thursday last was more remarkable for its absence than any previous effort of his on the same subject. Still, sufficient of the old leaven was to be seen to serve as a cue to Lord John and Mr. Hawes in their replies. The burthen of their answer may be said to be this—"We admit you to be right enough in general, and whenever the peculiar circumstances of any colony, or the obligation we have contracted with any, will admit of it, we will apply your principles. See, in New South Wales we are carrying them into effect almost to the letter!" The truth is the Government are in the same road as Sir William, only the man out of office would drive a little faster than the men in. The Globe, an ably conducted journal, and the most thick and thin supporter of Lord John, remarked yesterday, "that upon the whole we are not sorry that strong language like Sir William Molesworth's should be used from time to time, as to the charges sustained by the empire in defence of the colonies, and blunt questions put, like Mr. Cobden's, as to the quid pro quo we get for our force and money. Such lessons require reading to our colonists as well as to our selves." There came out the arriere pensée of Downing-street itself.

When one hears so much of colonial expenditure and the cost of our colonies, how remarkably does New South Wales stand out as a colony which has really cost the mother-country nothing! What has been the expenditure of Great Britain in that colony? An expenditure for the support of her own criminals, happily, for her sake, expelled for ever from her shores. But the moment the colony has outgrown the penal settlement, when it no longer relieves the mother-country of her criminals, from that moment our troops are withdrawn, and the colony is not even a nominal charge on her resources!

A parliamentary paper has lately been issued, on the motion of Sir William Molesworth—All the Petitions received from the Australian Colonies against Transportation. Those from Van Diemen's Land are of course the most numerous, amounting, I think, to some twenty, and all bearing a great amount of signatures.

April 16.

Mr. Adderley's motion was discussed last night, for a "Commission" of Inquiry to be despatched to the Cape, which was met by an amendment proposed by Lord John Russell for the appointment of a "Select Committee" to investigate the subject of Caffre wars and politics. The amendment was carried by 128 to 60.

Earlier in the evening Sir William Molesworth gave notice that he would move, on the 14th May, an address to the Queen, praying the discontinuance of transportation to Van Diemen's Land.

The Times of this morning, in a leading article, recommends the abolition of the military staff as yet maintained in New South Wales. There is little doubt the recommendation will be acted on.

STEAM COMMUNICATION WITH ENGLAND.

We published, in a late issue a, copy of a petition presented to the House of Commons, complaining of the delay which has attended the accomplishment of this great object, in spite of the promises, apparently only made to be broken, by the Government at home. We have received by the Bank of England, and we now lay before our readers, the copy of a Letter written by some influential colonists in London to the Chairman of the East India Company, together with a Letter addressed to his Excellency the American Minister.

This last letter, it will be perceived, is not yet sent, but the circumstance of such a letter being even penned, shows, at all events, that our London friends feel warmly upon this subject, the vital importance of which to Australia we have at all times cordially acknowledged.

At this crisis in the destiny of Australia, the completion of any project for diminishing the distance between Sydney and London must deeply interest any one in New South Wales, and we therefore lay before our readers these very interesting letters, in order to show that, even without the exciting news of our gold discoveries, the friends of the colony at home are not idle.

Association for the Promotion of Steam Communication with Australia,
Committee Rooms, 6, Charing Cross,
London, April 15, 1851.

Gentlemen,—The subject of the establishment of a steam route to the Australian colonies having been recently referred, with the concurrence of her Majesty's government, to a Parliamentary Committee, the execution of this project has again been indefinitely postponed, and we in consequence desire to be permitted to draw your attention to the great injury thus inflicted on these dependencies of the Crown, an injury which we believe it is in your power to palliate if you cannot remove. This course we are encouraged to take by a knowledge of the great anxiety you have always evinced for the early realization of a measure obviously so much connected with the interests of your Indian empire.

That a strict and searching Parliamentary inquiry should be instituted for the purpose of ascertaining not only the propriety but also the best mode of forming a steam line to Australia, is in itself a subject we by no means complain of. We however contend that such inquiry should have been made not now, but four years ago, and when we reflect that her Majesty's Ministers officially announced in February, 1848, that they were then in possession of all the information now sought to be obtained, we cannot avoid feeling that it is, to say the least, inconsistent on their part at present to sanction an inquiry into a measure which they have for the last three years daily if not monthly intimated to the public, was about to be carried into immediate execution.

You will therefore not feel surprised to learn that we protested against any reference to a Parliamentary Committee, and although we have vainly protested, we might possibly have been induced to wait with patience for the Report of that Committee had it appeared to us possible that they could report within a reasonable period.

Of this, however, we see no prospect. We believe the gentlemen who form the Committee will give the subjects brought before them their immediate attention; but we know that the field of their inquiry is so extensive, that an early report is impracticable. The mere question of steam communication with Australia forms but a small portion of the proposed investigation, for the Navy as well as Postal contract service of India have also been comprised in the inquiry. Both constitute wide subjects, and either the one or the other would offer ample matter to occupy a hard-working Committee a whole session. We therefore entertain reasonable doubts of an early Report; and we may add, there are persons who assure us that, viewing the present aspect of political affairs, it is very possible the Committee will not report at all.

In the interim Australia must obviously continue deprived of a measure long promised to her, and in the immediate attainment of which the due progress of her commerce and colonization is vitally involved.

Our anxious attention has, therefore, naturally been directed to consider how the injurious effects of those delays which we see impending may be best averted, and it has appeared to us that we might now with some justice solicit you to come forward temporarily, for the purpose of lessening the injury threatened to India, as well as to Australia, by those procrastinations, the results of which we so much dread.

We by no means call on you to undertake exclusively the duty of maintaining a steam route, but anxious as we are to palliate the effects of that state of isolation to which Australia is unfortunately condemned, we invite you to initiate a new era in the march of Australian, and we believe we may also add, Indian, civilization, by permitting one af your war steamers to open out a temporary communication between Singapore and Sydney, until the Committee now sitting report, and Government are enabled to organize other means of intercourse more in unison with the commerce and social requirements of the Australian colonies.

We have not failed to observe that in your correspondence with the Chancellor of the Exchequer published last year, you mark the importance you attach to a steam communication with Australia, by voluntarily offering to contribute your fair proportion towards its establishment, and we therefore feel assured that the subject of this letter will meet at your hands with that consideration which it undoubtedly merits. We would add, that in case it should appear to you inexpedient to adopt the measure which it is our duty to propose, we trust you will at all events urge the home Government to employ one of her Majesty's war steamers, now in the China seas, upon a service which it is so desirable should be at once commenced.

Believing that it is essential that you should be made acquainted with the views of the Australian colonists, regarding this to them momentous question, we submit you herewith the copy of a petition recently addressed to Parliament by several gentlemen who have occupied a prominent position in the affairs of those colonies. This document will no doubt be perused by you with interest, both as expressing the feelings of the colonists, and also as containing a plain but forcible statement of facts which cannot be controverted.

In the same view we forward you enclosed the copy of a letter recently submitted for the approval of this Association by several influential Australians.

You will observe that it is addressed to the Honorable Abbot Lawrence, Minister for the United States, and that it is an appeal to the Government of this country to establish a steam route to Australia, a duty which the writers assume has been virtually declined by England.

Our Committee have for obvious reasons dissuaded the forwarding of the above letter, and although the writers have in consequence for the present deferred its transmission, it is proper to name, that we have been recently informed by a gentleman prominently connected with British steam enterprise, that it is probable many reasons would influence America at once to take up a project hitherto declined by the mother country. This opinion is confirmed by the report of the Committee on naval affairs, presented to the American House of Representatives in the month of February last. If well grounded it would necessarily induce the selection of the steam route via Panama, and thus divert to that part of the world the stream of Australian passenger traffic, which would seem naturally destined to flow through the empire over which you preside.

At the request of the Committee of this Association,

We have the honour to subscribe ourselves,
Gentlemen,
Your most obedient servants,
WILLIAM FANE DE SALIS.
JOHN F. LESLIE FOSTER,
Honorary Secretaries.

London, March 1851.

Sir,—We are induced to address your Excellency under the following circumstances, and at the request of a numerous body of Australian colonists at present in England.

It is doubtless, well-known to you that for many years Australia has earnestly entreated the Home Government to diminish by means of steam the vast distance which separates her shores from the mother country. For the attainment of this object her citizens have evinced no ordinary degree of interest and anxiety. The colonial press teems with the subject, and the whole community has united in calling with one voice for the establishment of a steam route. Impelled by the ardently expressed wishes of their constituents, the representative bodies of the different

The transactions in all descriptions of Sole Leather Hides have been very limited during the past month, and prices continue to exhibit a downward tendency; by the last advices from the River Plate there does not appear any reason to apprehend a great accumulation of Stock, or any material reduction in the value of Salted Hides, but until the trade here have satisfied themselves that the lowest point has been attained we are not likely to experience any improvement in the tone of our market.

LEATHER.—82 bales received this month, per Derwent, with 38 on hand at the date of our last report, have sold readily at our quotations, and the market is now bare of Stock.

GREEN, SEAL, AND KANGAROO SKINS.—No Sales to notice.

The Stock of Foreign Tallow of all descriptions, when last made up, showed a total of 84 950 casks against 30,669 at the corresponding period last year, and 27,270 casks in 1849.

OF AUSTRALIAN TALLOW only a moderate quantity has been brought forward, nearly the whole of which has found buyers at an advance of 6d to 9d per cwt. on former prices, the Sales since the 19th ultimo amounting to 1490 casks.

CITY COUNCIL.—Yesterday, the adjourned Quarterly Meeting of the City Council was held in the Town Hall, the Right Worshipful the Mayor in the chair. There was an unusually full attendance of members, and the whole of the twenty-five motions upon the paper were disposed of. The Council did not break up until half-past seven o'clock.

STEALING MONEY.—About midnight on Saturday, James Donohue, of Pitt-street, butcher, gave a woman named Bubb, into the custody of Constable Heagney, for having, as alleged, stolen from his trousers' pocket, £10 in notes, while they were together in a stable near Park-street. Yesterday, there being no prosecutor, the prisoner was discharged.

ILLEGALLY ON PREMISES.—Robert Hunter, John Mackenzie, and Catherine Healey, were again brought up yesterday, on the charge of having been, for an unlawful purpose, on the premises of one Fernandez, a publican. There was no further evidence offered. Hunter said that he accidentally met the other prisoners, and invited them into the house, for the purpose of treating them to a glass of something to drink. Mackenzie alleged that he worked hard for his living, and could produce respectable witnesses to character, who had known him four or five years, in Sydney. Healey said that she merely went into the house on Hunter's invitation, and that her circumstances were not such as would lead her into any house for the purpose of thieving. Mr. M'Lerie found them guilty under the Vagrant Act, of having been in Fernandez's house, for the purpose of committing a felony, and sentenced them to be imprisoned and kept to hard labour, for the period of six calendar months.

HOUSE ROBBERY.—Robert Hunter was again brought up on the charge of Mr. Baxter, for having on Friday morning last stolen from a drawer the sum of £7 in notes and silver, and a cheque for £3. Mrs. Baxter's evidence, which was corroborative of her husband's given on Saturday, having been taken, the prisoner was committed to take his trial at the Quarter Sessions for the offence.

HOUSE ROBBERY. On Sunday forenoon, the residence of Mr Jencken, at Darling Point, was entered at one of the dining-room windows during the absence of the family at divine worship, and a number of silver spoons and forks, of about £10, stolen therefrom.

ALLEGED EMBEZZLEMENT. — On Thursday last, Mr. Charles Skerratt, a salesman in the establishment of Messrs. Price, Favenc, and Gwyn, appeared before Alderman Egan to answer a charge preferred by Mr. Gwyn, of having embezzled, on the 3rd April, the sum of 18s. 6d.; on 19th April, the sum of £1 11s. 9d.; and on the 28th April, the sum of 12s. 2d., amounts received by him as salesman, and for which he had not accounted. Mr. Johnson conducted the prosecution, and Mr. Brenan the defence. Edward Lawley, porter, in the service of prosecutor, deposed, that on the 3rd April, he delivered a parcel, as directed to a Mrs. Mahoney, and received 18s. 6d. the amount marked thereon, which he paid over to Mr. Skerratt. Thomas Weaver, another porter, deposed, that on the 19th April he delivered a parcel at the House of the Good Shepherd, and received in payment £1 11s. 9d.; and on the 28th of the same month, delivered a parcel to Mrs. Buist, and received in payment 12s. 2d.; both these sums of money he paid to Mr. Skerratt on his return to the establishment. Mr. Gwyn deposed, that he had searched the books and found no entry of these sums; there was a fourth charge in his original information, but having discovered that he was under a mistake, he now withdrew it. At Mr. Brenan's request the cross-examination of these witnesses was deferred until he had had an opportunity of examining the books under the instruction of his client, who he believed would be able very satisfactorily to explain the charges of Mr. Gwyn; and at the same time hoped his client would be admitted to bail. Bail was allowed in £80 with two sureties in £40 each, and the case was adjourned until Monday. Yesterday, when the case was called on, Mr. Johnson said he had the pleasure to inform his Worship that an investigation of the books had been made, by which it appeared that two of the three sums charged to have been embezzled had been received and regularly accounted for by other persons employed in the establishment, but how Mr. Skerratt's name had got mixed up with them could not be precisely ascertained unless the parcels had been made up by him for the assistants who were really the sellers, and to whom the moneys were paid by the porters. Mr. Gwyn having thus discovered that Mr. Skerratt was innocent in the two cases, he was willing to believe that the third was capable of explanation, though not able to trace it out. On behalf of his client, he (Mr. Johnson) expressed his satisfaction that the prosecution, which was instituted with regret, should terminate without affixing the slightest reproach on Mr. Skerratt's character. His Worship said that it would be necessary that the depositions should show the ground on which the prisoner was discharged from custody; in the present state of the case, as it appeared in evidence, he could not take on himself the liberation of the accused. Mr. Gwyn was thereupon sworn, and deposed as follows:—Since this investigation was remanded he had found on inquiry that two of the three sums which he charged Skerratt with embezzling had been paid, not to him, but to other members of the establishment, and by them paid in; though he could not trace the third item, he now believed Skerratt to be perfectly innocent of the charge of embezzling it, and therefore wished to withdraw it. Mr. Brenan said he was present on behalf of his client to explain the third item, whereupon his Worship said that after Mr. Gwyn's evidence to enter into any further explanation would be only a waste of time, which in the crowded state of the business papers it was desirable to avoid. Mr. Johnson said his client was very happy that the case had terminated in this way, and regretted exceedingly that any thing should have arisen to disturb the good understanding which had existed. Alderman Egan said he had much pleasure in discharging Charles Skerratt from custody, the prisoner left the Court without the slightest imputation on his character.

ARMY.—Lieutenant Ball is promoted to the company in the 11th Foot, vacated by the retirement of Captain Webster, appointed Governor of the Gaol. Ensign M'Henry gets the lieutenancy.

THE SYDNEY HAMLETS' ELECTION. — Mr. Thurlow met the St. Leonards' electors last evening at Mr. Hargreave's Inn on the North Shore. Mr. J. W. Parker was called to the chair. Mr. Thurlow addressed the meeting at some length, and, a resolution declaring him to be the most eligible candidate for the hamlets having been carried nem. con., it was announced that a public meeting would be held some few evenings hence, when each of the four candidates would have an opportunity of addressing the electors.

REVISION COURTS. — Yesterday Alderman Brown, assisted by Messrs. P. F. Morgan and Robert Coveny, as Assessors, held an adjourned Court, at the Supreme Court, King-street, for the completion of the Electoral Lists of Macquarie Ward. Of the thirty-three claims remaining to be considered only six were allowed, the rest not being maintained, either by the claimants or their accredited agents. Their names were struck out accordingly, and the Court was declared to be closed. The adjourned Court for revising the Gipps Ward lists will sit this Morning at ten o'clock, at the Lord Nelson Hotel, Kent-street North. The lists for that part of the county of Cumberland, which is within the boundaries of the police district of Sydney, will be revised by the revising magistrates in Petty Sessions, at the Sydney Police Office, this morning, at twelve o'clock.

The "Havannah nugget" of gold, purchased by Captain Erskine, the largest yet found in the colony, can be seen at Mr. Hale's, George-street, for a short time.

DISTRESSED NEEDLEWOMEN. — Thirty-six women sent out by Mr. S. Herbert's Committee have arrived by the Malacca. We are glad to be able to report favourably of their conduct during the voyage. Due notice will be given when they are open to enter into engagements.

FATAL BOAT ACCIDENT.—On Sunday evening, about eight o'clock, the younger son of Colonel Gibbes heard screams for assistance off Kirabili Point, North Shore, and immediately manning a boat, and pushing off in the direction whence the cries proceeded, he succeeded in rescuing two men, who had been upset in a small sailing boat. The third of their party, a man named Galloway, could not be found, although every effort was made to save him, and his body has not yet been recovered. The origin of the accident has not yet been clearly ascertained, but it is attributed to the sheets having been made fast. Galloway leaves a widow and child to mourn his untimely fate.

ATTEMPT AT SELF-DESTRUCTION.—On Sunday evening a man named Robert Bett threw himself into Darling Harbour. He was seen by a constable and rescued from the water. Upon being taken to the watchhouse for protection, Dr. Rutter, Surgeon of the Police Force, was in prompt attendance, and prescribed the usual restoratives with success. The unfortunate man was subsequently taken to the Sydney Infirmary, where he is now doing well.

CORONER'S INQUEST.—Yesterday, an inquest was held by the Coroner, at the Three Tuns Tavern, King-street, on view of the body of Margaret Ferris, then lying dead in the Sydney Infirmary. From the evidence of Constable Hast, it appears that on Sunday afternoon he found the deceased lying in Sussex-street, greatly exhausted. He placed her on a barrow and removed her to the female watchhouse, but the keeper would not receive her, saying that he thought she was dead; witness then procured a cab, and had her taken to the Infirmary; witness added that twice during the past week he had confined deceased for protection; and that during the last six months she had been frequently found lying in the streets; he believed the poor creature was quite destitute. Dr. M'Ewen stated that almost immediately after deceased was admitted into the Infirmary on Sunday she expired; he made a post mortem examination of the body; the cause of death was the effusion of serum on the brain, the consequence of exposure to cold and dissolute habits; externally the body was plump, and apparently fat. The Coroner, after adverting to the fatal consequences of such a life as deceased had led, directed the Jury to return a verdict in accordance with Dr. M'Ewen's evidence. Verdict, died by the visitation of God.

SUDDEN DEATH. — Philip M'Cormick, a dealer, residing in Clarence-street, died suddenly yesterday morning. An inquest will be held on the body this morning

PASSING FORGED NOTES.—Joseph Wainwright was yesterday committed to take his trial at the Criminal Court for having, on Wednesday evening last, passed a forged note of the Bank of Australasia at Davis' public-house, Clarence-street. Prisoner went there with another man, and after having liquor to the amount of 5s., tendered the note in question, which was received, and the balance, £4 15s. handed back. Mr. Buchanan, a clerk in the Bank of Australasia, deposed that the note produced had been a genuine £1 note of the Bank of Australasia, A 61,434, but had been so altered as that the word one appeared as five. The £5 notes of this Bank have the letters No. (signifying Number) before the figures, and in the margin the words "Bank of Australasia" in the old English character, while the £1 notes have the letter "A" before the number, and the name of the Bank in the margin is in the common Roman letters. The prisoner said he belonged to the ship Acheron, and was about to state how he became possessed of the note, when his Worship (Mr. M'Lerie) cautioned him against this course. He said he wished to state the circumstance under which the note came into his hands, and to describe the person from whom he received it, in order that the police might have an opportunity of apprehending the real criminal. Mr. M'Lerie said that he had better communicate that information privately to one of the Inspectors, and committed him to take his trial at the Central Criminal Court. Sarah Knight was also committed for uttering a counterfeit £1 note of the Union Bank, and Catherine Lawler as accessary thereto.

MISS TALBOT'S CASE.—Court of Chancery, April, 23: Doyle v. Wright:—Mr. R. Palmer presented a petition in this cause on behalf of Lord Edward Howard, the brother of the Duke of Norfolk and the Vice-Chamberlain of Her Majesty's Household, for a reference to the Master, to inquire whether it would be proper and beneficial to Miss Talbot that a proposal of marriage made to her by the petitioner should be accepted. Mr. Rolt said that he appeared on behalf of Dr. Doyle, the testamentary guardian of Miss Talbot, and cordially concurred in the application. The Lord Chancellor, without any comment, made the order asked.

THE STATE OF EUROPE.

(From the Times, April 24.)

THE FRENCH REPUBLIC.

PARIS, Tuesday, 5 P.M.—I have already noticed the change which has taken place in the management of the journal L'Assemblée Nationale, which has now become the avowed organ of the Fusionist party. The fact is not without importance at the present moment, and it has attracted in no trifling degree the attention of the provincial press and of the public generally. A few words on the subject may not be without interest.

The Assemblée Nationale dates from the first days which followed the revolution of February. It was founded in the very midst of the terror which froze up every heart, by M. Adrien de Lavalette. This writer was but slightly known in Parisian journalism—it required circumstances of so difficult and dangerous a kind to develope all the energy of his character. The daring courage with which M. de Lavalette attacked the "conquerors of February," the audacity with which he denounced their deeds and braved alike their insults and their anger, are not yet forgotten. In this difficult and perilous undertaking M. de Lavalette was soon supported by M. Michel Chevalier and the Journal des Débats. While M. de Lavalette held up to scorn the persons of the destroyers of society, M. Michel Chevalier exposed the destructive character of their doctrines. He ridiculed in a series of remarkable articles the specious charlatanism which, to the everlasting disgrace of a civilised population, was listened to so long within the walls of the Luxembourg. As soon as men began to recover their senses, and calm was somewhat restored, the Assemblée Nationale felt that the two revolutions of 1830 and 1848 had given to France a great lesson from which much benefit might be derived. Its views were simple and to the point. France, it considered, was monarchical, and yet it allowed the Monarchy to be overthrown, and be replaced by a Republic she did not love, and which she fears. The reason is that Monarchical France is divided into parties; and each party again subdivided into factions; but let these divisions and subdivisions cease—let but the Monarchical party unite in one common interest, and the story of the revolution is soon told, the Monarchy will again arise, and with it order and prosperity. Such, according to the Assemblée Nationale, was the germ of the plan of conciliation and union which is now termed the fusion. This idea was also entertained by several important members of the Legitimist party—such as MM. Berryer, de St. Priest, de Pastorel, de Noailles, d'Escart, Benoist d'Azy, de Valmy, and de Barthelemy. To these gentlemen it occurred that considerable advantage to the cause would be obtained by securing the co-operation of the Assemblée Nationale. Overtures were accordingly made by them to M. de Lavalette; and they acquired a considerable share in the property of the journal so far back as the month of April, 1849. In the meantime the party of the Fusion was extending. The plan had been eagerly adopted by the Orleanists or Conservatives of the greatest influence. It was submitted to the late King, Louis Philippe, who highly approved it. The Queen Amelie was of the same way of thinking; the Princes of the family saw in it hopes for the future; but the Duchess of Orleans hesitated to pronounce the same hearty approval. She spoke of it with reserve and doubt, because she thought it interfered with the rights of her children. Recent circumstances, however the death of the King, the attitude assumed by the Count of Chambord, his letter to M. Berryer, the approach of the year 1852, charged with so many events,—all contributed to strengthen the opinion of the personages above mentioned that France could only be saved by a return to monarchy—a monarchy founded or re-established on a large basis, on the union of the general interests of the country well understood—that is to say, the Monarchy of the Fusion. The moment there were found Fusionists in the Conservative party an avowed organ became indispensable to them in order to lay before the public the motives of fusion, and the great advantage for the Conservatives, who occupy so prominent a position in the national party, and for the Princes of the house of Orleans.

The Assemblée Nationale was the most appropriate journal for the purpose. It was merely necessary to come to an understanding. An arrangement has just been concluded after numerous conferences. The Legitimists, who were proprietors of the journal, have consented to divide the property, so that the Assemblée Nationale belongs at present principally to Count Molé and M. de Pastorel, to M. Berryer and M. de Montalivet, to the Duke of Noailles and the Duke de Montebello, to General Saint Priest and M. Duchatel, and to the Duke de Valmi and M. Vitet, and to a great number of other Legitimists or Orleanist Conservatives. The supreme direction is confided to M. Mallac, who formerly filled the functions of chief secretary to M. Duchatel, Minister of the Interior. MM. de Lavalette and Rabon are the editors. The political articles are chiefly suggested by Count Molé, M. Duchatel, M. Dumon, and M. Guizot. The Assemblée Nationale is at present a Conservative Fusionist journal. Its mission is to promote monarchical interests—to prove and to demonstrate that an experience of three years ought to be sufficient to convince the most sceptical of this truth—that the Republic is fatal to France, both at home and abroad; fatal at home, because the Republican system maintains in a state of over excitement the violent passions of the demagogues, by offering them at fixed periods, and arranged beforehand, the means of taking possession of the Government, and an opportunity of making use of it with full and entire liberty; abroad, because the Republican system destroys the prestige of France as it tends to her exclusion from the councils of Europe, and creates habits of alliances and coalitions to her prejudice, and which sooner or later must ruin her interests. The object of the journal is to demonstrate that France can find only in a monarchy the remedy for the evils which surround, and the dangers which menace her, provided the monarchy be strong and powerful; that a powerful monarchy can only be founded, and can only subsist, on the condition of the Legitimists and Conservatives forgetting their ancient dissensions and quarrels and forming henceforth but one great national party. The Assemblée Nationale will not be hostile to the President of the Republic. It will not hesitate to acknowledge the services Prince Louis Bonaparte has already rendered It does not mean that France should be deprived of, or reject, the services he may still render. It will declare that the authority and the powers of the President ought to be renewed until the Monarchical party shall have agreed on a definitive solution; and that it would be an act of insanity to substitute an unknown provisional Government for one tried by an experience of three years. Such are, in fact, the opinions of the statesmen, Legitimists or Conservatives, proposed to be developed by the editors of the Assemblée Nationale. Those names comprise almost all the ancient Conservatives, and that party who really governed France during the seventeen years of the reign of the late King Louis Philippe. Those seventeen years were not entirely without glory; they were the most prosperous France ever enjoyed The honour will be attributed to Louis Philippe—not the least of constitutional kings, and not wholly unskilled in the conditions of a representative Government as applicable to this country. History will associate in this honour the eminent men who, with the King, served the country by the immensity of their labours, the authority of their eloquence, the skill of their administration, their military glory, and their civic courage.

Two names only are wanting to that list—those of the Duke de Broglie and of M. Thiers. The Duke de Broglie abstains, because upon being called upon to give his opinion, on certain occasions and to certain persons, he does not think that he can actively join men of whom yet he does not cease to be the friend, and whose political sentiments he shares.

M. Thiers exhibits himself as a violent and decided adversary of the fusion, after having been, perhaps, its first partisan, and one of its first promoters. But at that period M. Thiers was in Paris, and M. Guizot in London. M. Guizot has returned to his country, and with a firm belief in the necessity of the fusion. He professes such to be his opinion; he recommends it; and that suffices for M. Thiers to oppose it. M. Thiers would change and turn about a hundred times over, merely not to act or speak as M. Guizot acts or speaks. With these exceptions, the best known chiefs of the old Conservative party still proclaim the necessity of a fusion, and co-operate, some in the Constitution, others in the direction of the Assemblée Nationale. This is what gives to that journal so much importance. It is known that it expresses the ideas of those who remained to the last moment faithful to Louis Phillippe, and who have, it must be said, a better right to be heard when they address themselves to the Conservative party, and to be credited, than those who, after having raised difficulty on difficulty in the way of the Government of the late King, after having spread snares beneath its footsteps, ended by precipitating it, at the last moment, into the abyss in which the monarchy perished.

A provincial journal, L'Echo de l'Ardour, has just proposed, in its own name, and that of its party, the election of M. Guizot for the department of the Landes, which takes place on the 11th of May. It does not state whether M. Guizot has accepted the offer.

The Reds of the Landes will probably abstain from voting. The only competitor of a serious kind to M. Guizot would be M. E. Duclerc, whose quality of ex-Minister of Finance of the Executive Commission of the Constituent Assembly deprives him of all chance of success with the monarchical party.

The extraordinary influx of strangers, particularly English, who visited Paris during the last week, has imparted new life to the desponding shopkeepers. The return of the weather, and the promenades of Longchamps, have increased the number of purchasers. The fancy shops, in particular, have reaped a harvest such as they had been unaccustomed to for some months. A few days more of such good times would go far to exhaust the stock of goods on hand, which is not large, and set the manufacturers again at work. Unfortunately the wholesale houses have not been so favoured. The late accounts from Portugal and Spain have likewise contributed to deprive them of customers. Several brokers who deal largely with the latter country have been instructed to suspend the execution of the orders they had already received. The dissolution of the Cortes and the insurrection in Portugal have created alarm, and it is apprehended that commercial operations will be abandoned until the assembling of the new Spanish Parliament. The Paris manufacturers who complain most of want of orders are toymakers, hatters, and jewellers. The cabinetmakers, who found employment for a long period, have now fallen into their dead season. It must be observed, however, that the above-named manufacturers had produced enormously during the last two years, and that the foreign markets are overstocked with their goods. Letters from the agricultural districts represent the growing crops as unusually fine, and at least a month more advanced than at the present season in ordinary years. Wheat and flour have again fallen in the Paris markets in consequence of the immense supplies which arrived during the Easter week. The markets in the departments are over supplied with wheat of inferior quality, which is sold at almost any price, and the official averages appear for that reason to be lower than they really are. The cattle fairs continue to be well supplied, and prices are remunerating for the feeder, although not so high as during the year 1846. Raw silk continues to decline in price in the southern departments, and the markets are uncommonly dull. More than 300 mill-owners have stopped working in the departments of the Drôme and the Ardèche, and those that are still open are working only half and quarter time, merely to give employment to their operatives. There has been a considerable amount of business transacted at the wine market of Bercy during the last few days, particularly for the suburbs of Paris and the northern departments. A rather smart frost was experienced in the south on the 3rd of this month, and it was feared the vines had been injured. The last accounts from Bordeaux and Toulouse mention, however, that no injury has been sustained, and that the vines are beginning to bud with extraordinary promise. Brandy has fallen in price at Bordeaux, and sales are difficult.

The Academy of Moral and Political Sciences has resolved, on the recommendation of M. Passy, to depute two of their members (MM. Blanqui and Michel Chevalier) to visit the Exposition in London, and to make a report on any remarkable facts which may be interesting to the professors of political economy.

A telegraphic despatch received this day from Madrid confirms that of yesterday, namely—that the insurrection of Marshal Saldanha is virtually at an end—the Marshal being chiefly occupied in effecting his escape, and his men trying to cross the Spanish frontier. Saldanha's men, it is stated, abandoned him in large numbers. Such, at least, is the news transmitted by the Spanish telegraph.

Very little business was transacted to-day on the Bourse. The Five per Cents opened at 92f. 50c. and closed at 92f. 35c. The Three per Cents, closed at 57f. 25c. Orleans Railroad Shares, 826f. 25c.; Rouen, 635f; Havre, 260f.; Great Northern, 475f.; Avignon, 207f. 50c.; Vierzon, 437f. 50c.; Basle, 145f.; Bordeaux, 402f. 50c.; Paris and Strasburg, 370f.; Tours and Nantes, 277f. 50c.

NORTHERN GERMANY.

The Direction of the Berlin and Cologne Railway, by the co-operation of the proprietors of the Brunswick line, will be enabled to run a train, from the 1st of May, from Berlin to Cologne in sixteen hours. It will leave the first-named city at six o'clock in the morning, and arrive at Cologne at ten the same evening. It is not stated that the improvement will be continued by a night train from Cologne to Ostend and Brussels, which would quicken the communication with London and Paris by a day. At present the English and French mails will remain as before at Cologne for the night, and be forwarded by the morning train as usual.

SAXONY.

Though many of the representatives are absent, the second and fourth Commissions of the Conferences have held sittings, but the discussions were on points of form of no general interest. A circular to all the district officers of the police calls their attention to an issue of notes or certificates of shares in a so-called German National Loan, which have been put in circulation in Saxony. They are an imitation of the Italian notes of Mazzini and his associates, and are intended for a similar purpose—to raise a revolutionary fund for the future or present use of the German Revolutionary Committee in Paris. That committee has appointed a finance commission to manage the loan and receive the contributions. The amount proposed to be raised is five millions of thalers, bearing five per cent interest.—For the present only interim notes are issued; these are signed and filled up by the subscribers with any sum they please; the lowest amount is one thaler (3s.), the highest 100 (£15). The genuine obligations will be distributed to the subscribers in exchange for them, is stated at latest within six months. The Commission has the power of publishing the programme of the operations for which the loan is to be used hereafter. The field of action is to be Germany, as the object of the Mazzini loan is to work in Italy. The certificates, of which specimens are in the hands of the police, are signed by Kinkel, A. Goegg, A. Willich, E'Ester, and Lüdlich.

SPAIN.

The religious ceremonies of the Holy Week were celebrated with the usual pomp in all the churches of Madrid. The queen washed the feet of six poor men in the Royal chapel, and at 4 o'clock Her Majesty, accompanied by the King and the entire Court, left the Palace to perform the seven stations.

The Heraldo states that the Progressistas intended to avail themselves of the general elections to raise again their banners. General Espartero has not only accepted the post of honour to which the electors of that party had elevated him, but was disposed likewise to occupy de facto the presidency of the electoral Directing Committee. General Ortega, one of his friends, was also very active. The Government on being informed that he had left on the 16th for Aragon, immediately sent an express after him, with orders to arrest him wherever he was to be met.

It being Holy Thursday, the Bourse remained closed.

TROOPS IN THE COLONIES.

(From the Times, April 16.)

IT might, perhaps, appear superfluous, after the signal confirmation of the views of Sir William Molesworth, afforded by the conduct of the Government with regard to Canada, to canvass at any greater length the propriety of removing the troops from our colonies, and the concession to them at the same time of full and ample powers of local self-government, if it did not appear that under the Protectionist regime the burden of proof will be considered to lie on the man who proposes the reduction, rather than on him who advocates the maintenance or increase of our expenditure, and that in order to justify the withdrawal of troops costing us a million and a half per annum from our colonies, it will not be enough to show that they do no good there, but we must be prepared to demonstrate that they effect a positive evil. According to the supporters of our future Government, the expenditure of a large sum of money is a good thing in itself, and it is not enough to show that it is useless without proving that it is positively and actively injurious. It is not pretended that the military expenditure in the colonies does any good, but then it is sufficient that it does no harm These are doctrines full of evil omen for our future financial management, and curiously illustrate the hollowness of that outcry for retrenchment which is one of the numerous Protean shapes in which the genius of Protection, ashamed to appear any longer in its own form, has condescended to travestie itself. But though no good has been or can be shown to result from the military occupation of our colonies, other reasons beside the advantage of squandering a large sum of our money are given for the maintenance of the system—not, however, as matters of fact, but of plausible hypothesis. Thus, it is advantageous for us to hold Canada with imperial troops, because we have there a frontier of 1500 miles through which to attack America. But the facility of attack is compensated by a corresponding difficulty of defence, and we imagine the colonists of the Cape would tell us that the advantage of a frontier of seven hundred miles through which to attack the Caffres is dearly purchased by the equal facility which the Caffres possess of attacking them. The ancient Greeks gave the shield to Pallas and the sword to Mars, to signify that in war defence was more important than attack, and a weaker state with a large frontier conterminous with a stronger will be disposed to agree with them. The importance of Jamaica as a fortified post is illustrated not more felicitously by the remark that it may probably be the means of diverting the stream of Pacific commerce and the future communication with our Australian colonies from the sea which washes its shores, and diverting it to the Isthmus of Tehuantepec. We can imagine many better reasons for spending a million and a half of our money than the frightening away commerce from our dominions.

Another ground for this expenditure is that we may preserve to Parliament the power of meddling in local colonial disputes, and sitting as a court of appeal over the colonial Legislatures,—considering the ignorance and apathy of Parliament on Colonial matters, the transparent absurdity involved in the notion of appeal from one legislative body to another, and the ill success with which these efforts at interference have uniformly been attended, we cannot think this power worth the price which is to be paid for it. Still less can we continue to tax ourselves at the rate of nine shillings in the pound on our exports to the colonies in order to force upon them a system of reciprocity, and prevent their adopting a protective tariff after the example of America. It must be a heavy duty indeed which would be worth averting at such a price. And yet it is for the sake of these visionary and imaginary results—for the sake of the power of attacking an enemy stronger than ourselves—for the sake of driving the commerce of the world from its natural channels, and meddling in matters in which we have no concern, and of averting the possibility of a hostile tariff, that we are called upon to tax the raw material of the manufacturer and the comforts and necessaries of the labourer. But the case does not stop here. Not only does the military occupation of our colonies produce no good, but it is the parent of many evils, which, even if its enormous cost were as much a matter of indifference to the people of England as to Protectionist financiers, would render its discontinuance most desirable. It is true that the troops are not in most colonies sufficiently numerous to put down any very serious insurrection. It is also true that the government of the colonies is not a military despotism, though that fact has arisen not from any power of the colonists to prevent such a government, but from the unwillingness of the Colonial Office to impose it. The colonies have almost all until very lately been governed under constitutions which they detest and despise, and to which they have submitted merely from the fact that they were upheld by the power of England. The symbol of that power, and of the intention if necessary to use it against them, they saw in the troops which were placed amongst them, not for the purposes of external defence, but of internal coercion. However inferior these troops might be in number, the colonists regarded them as indications of the presence of a power against which they could not struggle. Thus their civil liberties, their equality before the law, and whatever political privileges they might possess, they held not as a matter of inalienable right, but as the free gift of the Colonial Office. If the office has been unreasonable and the colonies discontented, it is to the presence of the troops that this must be attributed; let the troops be withdrawn, and the regulating power of the internal government will no longer be the will of the Minister but of the colonists, all causes of discontent will be removed, and it will be unnecessary to enter into any abstract disquisitions as to the amount of control over colonial affairs, which must be surrendered since that question will be settled for itself by withdrawing the power of coercion.

The colonists have hitherto owed to our indulgence whatever rights they possess, they will henceforth owe to the same source the power of regulating those rights without our interference. For this conciliatory result the withdrawal of the troops will be the surest guarantee. So long as we undertake their protection the colonies will never develope a martial and national spirit worthy of their origin. So long as we fill his Court with foreign civil and military officials, we intrust the Governor with the power, too often abused, of degrading the tone of social morality, and breaking down the salutary distinctions and restraints of society. We raise up a host of jobbers and contractors, who exist by the expenditure of the troops, and whose interest it is to increase their numbers and perpetuate their presence. We increase the danger of wars whose administration and expenditure we cannot control by the presence of a large number of persons whose professional ambition and pecuniary interest are concerned in commencing and protracting them. For these reasons, we apprehend that were the burden of proof thrown on those who would reduce, instead of resting, as it really does, on those who would maintain the Imperial expenditure in the colonies, the military occupation which is the object of that expenditure is proved to be the most injurious, by encouraging mischievous interference on the part of the Colonial Office, by inducing wars, by checking public spirit, and by arming the Governor with objectionable powers. Our million and a half does not merely no good; it produces serious and manifold evils, which it would be better spent in preventing, if it were not happily in our power to prevent them by refraining from spending it at all. The subject will again come under discussion with reference to the Cape of Good Hope, and once more when the bill shall be introduced, which will be necessary in order to make the salary of Lord Elgin a charge upon the Imperial Treasury. We trust on these occasions a better understanding will prevail between the Government and the non-official friends of the colonies, and that they will unite their forces against those who appear to be alike hostile to the colonial citizen and the British tax-payer, and who seek to perpetuate one evil for the sake of another—extravagance for the sake of misgovernment and misgovernment for the sake of extravagance. To this we would oppose the policy of obtaining one good by means of another—the conciliation of the colonies by means of financial economy, and financial economy by means of conciliation of the colonies. We care not which is considered the end and which the means—both are sufficiently desirable to be the objects of our policy, and each is the necessary condition and inseparable adjunct of the other. Apply to the other colonies the principle so boldly applied to Canada. Break up the expensive and useless staff which still remains in New South Wales, and withdraw the skeleton of a regiment over which it presides. In the northern island of New Zealand the people of England are maintaining three thousand men to defend an adult population which does not exceed that number at an expense of one hundred and fifty thousand pounds a year, which exceeds the amount of our exports to the island, and quadruples its own local revenue. Besides this we maintain two war steamers there for the coercion of the natives. It is high time that such a system should cease. If New Zealand can only be preserved by paying an annuity out of the Consolidated Fund of fifty pounds per annum to every settler—if each workman must have one soldier to guard him—if four pounds of our revenue must be spent in order to raise one pound of theirs—and if for every pound's worth of goods our merchants export we must pay another pound, the sooner such a ruinous and ridiculous experiment is brought to a close the better. We oppose to the right of the settlers to be protected against the Maories the greater right of the English people to be protected against the Chancellor of the Exchequer, and we trust that the session will not be allowed to pass over without another effort to reduce this gratuitous waste of the national resources.

TRUST AND LOAN COMPANY OF UPPER CANADA.—A company under a royal charter has just been founded, called the Trust and Loan Company of Upper Canada, with the view of lending money in that province, on the security of rates, tolls, or assessments, or on mortgages of real estate, thus applying the capital which is essential to its progress. By an act of the Provincial Parliament passed last session, the company are allowed to charge 8 per cent. interest, and as that is a common rate in Canada on good landed security, and it is proposed that the loans on mortgages shall in no case exceed half the marketable value of the property, both profit and safety are relied upon. That much might be done by such means is unquestionable, the success of undertakings of this kind being purely a question of honest management. An analogous company has existed in New York for twenty years, and is regarded as one of the most respectable and prosperous estabblishments in the State; but, on the other hand, the instances both in America and Australia are numerous of failure through reckless advances on unmarketable assignments. The capital of the present company, which is fully subscribed, is £500,000, with power of increase to £1,500,000, and its trustees are Mr. Baring and Mr. Glyn, Sir Randolph Routh being its president. As far as personal guarantees can go, there is consequently every reason to anticipate its being cautiously conducted, and in that case it may prove an important aid in developing the resources of the colony, and promoting the most satisfactory kind of immigration.

MR. SIDNEY HERBERT'S FEMALE EMIGRATION SCHEME.—Yesterday the thirteenth consignment of emigrants under this scheme, which was promoted to relieve the distressed needlewomen by removing such portions as are desirous of leaving their own country, and who bear good characters, to the colonies, where female labour is more highly prized and better remunerated than it is in the land of their birth, left Gravesend for Sydney, in the Malacca, a first class vessel of 589 tons burthen. The number of emigrants who left yesterday, and who for some time past have been maintained in the Female Emigrants' Home, Hatton-garden, amounts to 36, whose ages are represented to be from 16 to 35. As a body they appear to be a hearty well-disposed set of girls, well suited to benefit the colonies, though they are decidedly not of the class properly called needlewomen, the majority being of the lower order of dom

WEST INDIA AND MEXICAN MAILS.

ARRIVAL OF THE CLYDE.

SOUTHAMPTON, FRIDAY, APRIL 18.—The royal mail steam ship Clyde, Captain F. Moss, has just arrived here from the West Indies and Mexico. The mails were forwarded to the General Post Office from Falmouth.

The late arrival of this packet has been occasioned by her detention at St. Thomas for several days, waiting for the steamer Great Western (employed on the Jamaica and Gulf route), and for the Derwent (employed on the Demerara and Windward Island station). The irregularity of the Derwent was caused by the late arrival of the Thames outwards with the English mails of February 17. The Clyde has experienced a continued succession of strong easterly gales, with a heavy head sea, during the whole of the voyage, which has occupied 27 days, and was in consequence forced to put into Fayal for a supply of fuel. The Clyde also called at Falmouth to replenish her stock of coals, as not having taken on board a large quantity at Fayal they became exhausted by the protracted run thence to Falmouth, which has occupied 10 days. The Cape mail steamer Propontis was also forced to put into Falmouth, as she had not enough coals to reach Plymouth, although she had coaled at Madeira.

or £294,122 sterling.

The St. Lucia Paladium contains an account of the inauguration of municipal institutions in that island, under an ordinance which has received the sanction of the Queen. On the 27th of February the first elections took place, and an electoral body was formed of nine counsellors and two auditors. At the close of the proceedings Mr. H. H. Breen having been chosen by the municipality as the mayor of the town, a committee of by-laws was named, and the salary of the town clerk fixed at £150 per annum.

From the French West Indies we learn that the quantity of produce shipped from those colonies in the year ending the 31st of December, 1850, was 15,068,980 kilog. of sugar, 6009 litres of molasses, 1,077,557 litres of rum, 74,134 kilog. coffee, 150,266 kilog. of cocoa, from Martinique; from Guadaloupe, 12,831,917 kilog. sugar, 1360 litres molasses, 18,123 litres of rum, 177,917 kilog. coffee, 14,065 kilog. cocoa, 7256 kilog. of cotton. Compared with the returns for 1849 there is a deficiency in the exports of sugar from Martinique of 4,454,080 kilog., and in that of Guadaloupe of 4,875,479 kilog. The following is the extract of a letter from Guadaloupe, dated the 4th of February:—"Our misfortunes continue. It seems that the fanatics who have sworn the ruin of their country derive renewed audacity even from the severities visited upon those among them that have been discovered. The condemnation to five years' imprisonment of M. St. Marie, late adjoint Mayor of the commune of Port Louis, convicted of perjury and subornation, has been responded to by the burning down the house of Madame Bouge, a widow of 70 to 75 years of age. Her cook, named Thérèse, has been arrested on suspicion of the crime. The house was built of wood and stood at the head of a whole quarter, so that the flames, aided by the prevailing breeze, would proceed from house to house, gaining new aliment until the accomplishment of the work of destruction. This imparts no little importance to this new incendiary attempt of the 26th of January. Several persons have been taken up at Pointe-à-Pitre for raising the cry of "Death and civil war;" they are referred to the conseil of war. Certain revelations made by one Cabou were leading to the arrest of numbers of the 'Red' party."

From Barbadoes the Mercury reports a fair quantity of sugar to have been already made, and that many estates in the Windward districts of the island will close their crops before the end of the present month. No diminution is anticipated this year, compared with last year's crop. The Legislature has granted £50 to be appropriated to the transmission of numerous manufactured articles and raw materials to the London Exhibition. The fruits of Barbadoes, moulded in wax, are among the specimens to be forwarded to the Crystal Palace. The sum of 2018 dollars 16 cents (or £420 9s. sterling)—collected by private subscriptions and from churches and chapels—was remitted by the last mail steamer to Jamaica for the relief of the sufferers from cholera.

From Tobago the Grenada Gazette says:—"We are informed by the Tobago Chronicle, of the 20th ultimo, of the arrival in Courland Bay, on the previous day, of her Majesty's sloop of war Helena, for the express purpose of conveying Mr. Rowland E. Coker, clerk in the Commissariat Department, to Porto Rico, to identify some natives of Tobago, "who, some 33 years ago, there is too much reason to fear, were illegally sold to some of the inhabitants of Porto Rico, by an unprincipled captain, named Libby, in the schooner Lesliah."

The intelligence by the Clyde from Jamaica is by no means uninteresting, although not important. The legislative business of the country was progressing favourably, although slowly. There seemed an evident desire to perform the public work without respect to party differences, and it was expected that those unseemly scenes which had hitherto been enacted between opposite parties would be avoided.

The most important subject before the House was the financial condition of the country, and various schemes had been propounded both in public and private to meet a deficiency of about £80,000. A committee appointed on the motion of Mr. W. Smith, recommended the assessment of new taxation, and an increase of 3½ per cent. ad valorem duty on articles imported. These propositions underwent a long discussion, and were thrown over in consequence of some formality with the rules of the House not being observed. The feeling of the House, or rather of the majority, being against the scheme, it was not likely that it would be re-introduced. It was supposed that the next proposition to be discussed would be the assessment of a general property tax to meet the deficiency, but this was not before the House at the time of our advices being closed. The House had voted the usual salary to the Governor. Mr. Jackson, a member of the Government party, was the only member who offered any strenuous opposition to the measure.

Complaint was loud throughout the island of the irregularities in the arrivals of the steamers. The steamer with the mails of the 17th of February did not reach Kingston until the 14th of March. Intelligence to the 15th of February was received at Jamaica, via New York and Chagres, on the same morning, by the Crescent City steamer.

We have accounts from British Guiana to the 16th ult. The combined Court was fairly at work upon the financial business of the year.

Her Majesty's steamer Inflexible, with troops from Jamaica, having been refused pratique at Demerara, had left for Barbadoes. The Royal Gazette thus speaks of the agricultural prospects of the colony:—"The weather during the fortnight has been showery, and not unfavourable, generally speaking, to the planters; though in some parts of the country the fall of rain has been excessive. In the upper district of the Canje, in Berbice, so heavy has been the rain, that many of the settlers have been driven from their homes by the inundations of the river, which have proved most destructive to the provision grounds of the people. On the coasts, however, where the sugar estates are, for the most part, situated, we have not as yet heard any complaints of an excess of wet weather. Indeed, upon the whole, for some months past the season has been tolerably favourable to the growth of the sugar-cane."

By way of Demerara we have received files of journals from Surinam and Cayenne. In the latter colony, from which our advices are to the 22nd of February, the yellow fever appears to be abating, though we observe, that in Surinam vessels arriving thence are still subjected to quarantine.

From Surinam our accounts are to the 8th ultimo. The most interesting matter contained in the journals is a table showing the exports of Surinam during 1850. From this it appears, that the total estimated value of exports, the produce of that colony, during the past year, was 2,835,250f. 62c., which is about equal to 1,150,000 dollars.

The Surinam papers contain two Royal orders from His Majesty the King of the Netherlands, dated the 14th and 16th of January last, placing the shipping of the free Hanseatic towns of Lubeck and Bremen on the same footing as Dutch in all the colonies and possessions beyond the sea belonging to Holland; with one exception, however—the coasting trade in the Dutch East Indies, from which, probably from motives of a purely political nature, the shipping of Lubeck and Bremen shall continue to be excluded. These orders of his Majesty William III., which, by the way, recite that they were resolved on upon the advice of his Ministers of Finance and of the Colonies, and in consideration of those free cities having fulfilled the conditions of the Netherlands law of the 8th of August, 1850, for regulating the interests of Dutch shipping, were published and proclaimed in Surinam on the 6th ultimo, by Governor Van Raders, for the information and guidance of the public of that colony.

We have Trinidad journals to the 17th together with our usual correspondence. There is no political news of importance. The American steamer Victoria had arrived to ply between Port of Spain, Naparima, and Cedros.

THE GREAT EXHIBITION.

THE Royal Commission have issued the following programme of the manner in which the State opening by Her Majesty, already announced to the public, is to be conducted:—

EXHIBITION OF 1851.

Her Majesty having signified her royal pleasure that arrangements should be made to enable Her Majesty to gratify a wish very generally expressed on the part of the public to be present at a ceremony by which Her Majesty should open the Exhibition of the Works of Industry of all Nations on the 1st of May, Her Majesty's Commissioners hereby give notice that the programme of this ceremony, and the regulations under which the holders of season tickets will be admitted, are as follow:—

Exhibitors' attendants who have been sanctioned by the Executive Committee will be admitted between the hours of 8 and 9 o'clock, at doors specified on their cards, and will immediately take their places by the counters or objects exhibited by their employers.

Holders of season tickets will be admitted at all doors on the east, south, and west of the building between the hours of 9 and half-past 11 o'clock, and will be allowed to take their places, subject to police regulations, in the lower part of the building and in the galleries, except the parts railed off in the nave and transept.

A platform will be raised to the north of the centre of the transept, on which a chair of State will be placed.

Her Majesty's Commissioners will assemble at half-past 11 o'clock in the transept, opposite the platform, together with their Executive Committee and the Foreign Acting Commissioners, in full dress or in plain evening dress.

His Grace the Archbishop of Canterbury, Her Majesty's Ministers, the great Officers of State, and the foreign Ambassadors and Ministers, will take their places on the platform to the right and left of the chair of State, in full dress, also at half-past 11 o'clock.

Her Majesty, proceeding in State, with the Royal family, foreign guests, &c., and her and their suites from Buckingham Palace, up Constitution-hill, and down Rotton-row, will enter the Exhibition building by the north entrance precisely at 12 o'clock. She will ascend the platform and take her seat in the chair of State.

On Her Majesty's arrival a choir will sing "God Save the Queen."

On the Queen taking her seat his Royal Highness Prince Albert will join the Royal Commissioners, and when the music has ceased proceed at their head to the platform, and read to Her Majesty a short report of the proceeding of the Commission up to that time, which he will then deliver to Her Majesty, together with the catalogue of the articles exhibited. Her Majesty will return a gracious answer, handed to her by the Secretary of State, after which his Royal Highness Prince Albert will take his place again by the side of her Majesty.

The Doyen of the Corps Diplomatique will read an address to her Majesty on behalf of the foreign nations who have contributed to the Exhibition, to which her Majesty will return a gracious answer.

His Grace the Archbishop of Canterbury will then say a prayer, invoking God's blessing on the undertaking, followed by a short anthem sung by the choir.

A Royal procession will then be formed, preceded by the Commissioners, which will turn to the right, move to the west end of the nave by its north side, return to the east end of the nave by its south side, including the south end of the transept, and come back to the centre along the north side of the nave; thus enabling all those present, who will be expected to keep the places which have been assigned to them, to see her Majesty and the procession.

During the procession the organs appointed will play marches, taking the music up at the Queen's approach.

On her Majesty's return to the platform the Queen will declare "the Exhibition opened;" which will be announced to the public by a flourish of trumpets and the firing of a royal salute on the north of the Serpentine; whereupon the barriers, which had kept the nave clear, will be thrown open, and the public will be allowed to circulate.

Her Majesty will then return to Buckingham Palace by the route by which she came.

All the doors, which will have been closed at half-past 11 o'clock, will, upon her Majesty's departure, be opened again.

By order of Her Majesty's Commissioners,
EDGAR A. BOWRING,
Acting Secretary.

TO THE

SYDNEY MORNING HERALD.

TUESDAY, AUGUST 12, 1851.

TO WILLIAM C. WENTWORTH, ESQ.

SIR,—We, the undersigned, being all duly qualified to be placed upon the Electoral Roll for the City of Sydney, at the next ensuing Registration, request that you will allow us to put you in nomination as a candidate to represent us.

Holding, as many of us do, conflicting opinions upon various Public Questions, we yet feel that we can consistently meet upon common ground, for the purpose of giving you our cordial and unanimous support.

However some of us may disapprove of particular measures which you have advocated, or particular views which you have expressed, the useful and permanent character of your public services, and the eminent ability which you are universally admitted to possess, compel us to disregard those points on which we differ, in the consideration of those on which we agree.

That, in the course of your long political career, your public acts have not uniformly met with the approbation of the whole of that large majority of your fellow-colonists who have hitherto given you their support, is a circumstance which in no way disentitles you to the continued confidence of those, who are attached to the liberal and enlightened principles which you have ever professed, and whose co-operation has been won, by the zeal and talent by which those principles have been always maintained.

The great body of the people, for whose cause you have so often fought, have remained proof against every species of misrepresentation; and two general elections have already amply testified the estimation in which you are held by a large majority of the electors of this city.

A Third Election, attended with a like result, will show that the estimation in which you are still held is as high as it ever has been, and that you have not lost your elevated and honorable public position, because you preferred general to partial interests—freedom to anarchy—and a manly loyalty to incipient sedition.

Your public acts are too well known to render any recapitulation of them necessary now.

A statesmanlike career of nearly thirty years' duration must present too many objects for notice even, in an address like this.

One of your first acts was a successful struggle for the freedom of the press,—one of your last was the foundation of the University of Sydney.

To these, and to numerous other measures of kindred character, you are indebted for the reputation you enjoy with us, and they are sufficient to establish an honorable fame with our posterity.

On these broad and general grounds, do we ask you to become a candidate—tendering, as we now do, our utmost support to you, as the consistent friend of order without tyranny, and liberty without license; and we do so in the full and undoubting confidence, that the Electors of this Great Metropolis will do themselves the honour of returning a third time, at the head of the Poll, that Citizen whose abilities and services alike entitle him to the distinction.

[Here follow the signatures of Thomas Barker, Esquire, and 1126 other electors of the City.]

To THOMAS BARKER, Esquire, and the gentlemen who have signed the requisition inviting me to become a candidate for the representation of the city of Sydney.

24th July, 1851.

Gentlemen,—Though I feel that my advancing years and declining health require repose, I feel also that an important epoch has just arisen among us—an epoch replete with hope and future promise on the one hand, but with social and moral evils on the other, which it will require all the judgment, vigour, and patriotism of the country to avert. In a conjuncture so critical no private consideration should be allowed to interfere with public duty, and I have therefore no hesitation, at your requisition, in offering myself as a candidate for the representation of your city at the coming election. Having already stood two contested elections—the last of them at your bidding—both of which ended by placing me at the head of the poll, the spontaneous and cordial support which you tender me at a third contested election, cannot but be most gratifying to my feelings, and will, I doubt not, terminate in a like triumphant result.

Among a constituency of so many and such varied pursuits as that which I have had the distinguished honour to represent, there must necessarily be every variety and shade of opinion on most subjects of great public importance.

This conflict of opinion no one man could possibly represent; and it is sufficient for me, considering the prominent part I have taken for many years past in public affairs, if my legislative career, in the main, has entitled me to the continued confidence which so numerous and influential a body of my fellow-citizens still repose in my zeal and ability for the service of my country.

The unequivocal proof of your general concurrence in my views and measures, which is involved in your requisition, I deem a sufficient answer to the unmeasured abuse with which I have been of late systematically assailed, with a view doubtless of influencing the course of the coming election, so as to aid the levelling projects of that democratic party who have not hesitated to express their fiendish joy at what they consider, the impending destruction of that great productive interest among us, which sustains directly and indirectly nearly our entire population, and in its beneficial reaction on our parent country, gives employment to tens, perhaps hundreds, of thousands of our industrious fellow-countrymen at home.

For my own part I consider it one of the proudest distinctions of my life, that my public acts have been of a character, to draw down upon me the enmity and vituperation of this dishonest and malignant faction.

And here, gentlemen, I should conclude, by returning you my cordial thanks for the generous support which you have tendered me at the approaching election, only, that there is one question of paramount public interest in which I have taken the lead in the Legislative Council, and to which I desire briefly to refer,—I mean the vexed question of transportation.

My report on General Grievances, and on Mr. Gladstone's Despatch, are both sufficient to show that I have ever been opposed, in the abstract, either to the revival or continuance of transportation, if it could by any means have been got rid of in the whole of the colonies comprising the Australian group.

But seeing the inflexible determination of the Colonial Minister to continue transportation, at all events, to Van Diemen's Land, and his evident intention to form a penal establishment of some sort or other on our northern frontier,—I could not resist the conclusion, that direct transportation, accompanied, as was proposed, with a simultaneous and commensurate free immigration at the cost of Imperial funds; and with the additional advantage of a large commissariat expenditure, which would be its necessary adjunct—was in every way more expedient, morally, socially, economically, and politically, than the indirect transportation, without any of these advantages, which has in effect been going on by thousands, for many years past to this and our sister colony of Victoria.

My votes in the Legislative Council have amounted to nothing more than an affirmation of the superiority of such direct to such indirect transportation. This I still deem a self-evident proposition.

A new and unexpected era, however, has at length dawned upon us—an era, which must in a very few years precipitate us from a colony into a nation.

In the altered condition of things, which must be consequent on the great change, which has even now commenced both in the numbers and character of our population, I think we are at length, or at least soon shall be for the first time, in a position to control the policy of the Colonial Minister, and that if we have not already, we shall very shortly have both moral and physical force sufficient to convince him that the people of these colonies will no longer allow them to be the receptacles of the criminals of the British empire, even if that Minister should be insane enough to desire to continue his present policy.

It appears to me, however, that the British nation will immediately become aware of the frightful inducement to the commission of crime, and of the vast social demoralization which must at once ensue among large masses of her people, if she were to permit her convicts to be deported to colonies adjacent to our gold field, and consequently that a due regard for her own interests will satisfy her, that, if transportation is still to be part and parcel of her system of secondary punishment—some new settlement must be formed by her for this purpose in some part of the earth so remote from these shores, as to render it next to impossible that any of her criminals, even after the expiration of their sentences, can work their way to any of these colonies.

These being the altered views which I have formed, since Australia has been proved to be an auriferous region of great extent, I think it equally due to myself and the constituency at large whose suffrages I am soliciting, to give them publicity, and to state unequivocally that I shall in future support, whether I be in the Legislature or out of it, every proposition, which shall oppose the revival of transportation in this colony under whatever modification, or which shall insist upon its immediate abolition in the whole of the colonies forming the Australian group. I should indeed feel no hesitation in joining in any remonstrance which should have for its object to deprecate the formation of any penal colony in the Southern Hemisphere.

I have the honour to be, gentlemen,

Your most obliged and obedient servant,

1959 W. C. WENTWORTH.

TO JAMES MACARTHUR, Esq., &c., &c.
CAMDEN PARK.

SIR,—We, the undersigned Electors of the Western Division of the County of Camden, request that you will consent to become a Candidate for the Representation of our Electoral District in the ensuing Legislative Council.

While it is not to be expected that a perfect unanimity should exist amongst us as to the course taken by you with respect to every measure that may have been brought forward during your past Legislative career, still a grateful sense of your exertions for the benefit of the county, but more particularly of your zeal for the general welfare of the colony, and our experience of your ability and attention to your public duties, make us especially desirous to secure your valuable offices in the Council which is now about to be called together.

Pledging ourselves to do our utmost to ensure your return, in the event of your compliance with our wishes,

We have the honour to be, Sir,
Your most obedient servants.
[Here follow the signatures.]

Camden Park, 22nd July, 1851.

GENTLEMEN,—I thank you sincerely for the requisition you have done me the honour to present to me, and of which, you inform me, other copies are in the course of signature, inviting me to become a candidate for the representation of the Western Division of the County of Camden, in the Legislative Council, about to be called together under the new Constitutional Act.

This mark of unabated confidence, together with the flattering terms in which my public conduct is adverted to, and a desire expressed, again to place me in the Council, is especially gratifying, because it assures me, that the motives by which I have been actuated are rightly estimated by the great body of that constituency, whose good opinion I am most anxious to retain. It displays also the extent of your kind feelings, and makes me the more sensible of my deficiency in all but the will to serve you.

As you justly observe, gentlemen, it is not to be expected that a perfect unanimity of sentiment should prevail, as to the course I may have taken, on every occasion; and from the very nature of things, should it be the pleasure of the constituency to elect me, this observation must apply to the future no less than to the past.

Although elected by separate constituencies, each member becomes the representative of the whole colony, and upon all measures brought under consideration in the Council, is bound to pursue that course which in his deliberate and conscientious judgment, he conceives to be most for the general welfare, setting aside personal or local considerations, which might unduly influence his decision. I have hitherto sought, and shall always endeavour, so far as my limited capacity will permit, to maintain this salutary principle, and in subservience to it, to promote the interests of the county to the utmost of my power. But, however anxious a member of Council may be faithfully to discharge his duties to his constituents and the public, expectations must frequently be disappointed, and grounds arise for differences of opinion.

One most important matter on which my views did not coincide with those of many whose opinions I greatly respect—I allude to the proposed admission of exiles, under certain limitations and conditions, or, as it is generally termed, the Transportation Question—has been definitively settled by the Resolutions adopted without a division by the late Council, on the 1st October, 1850. The decision then arrived at, supported as it was by strong demonstrations of popular opinion, with scarcely any public manifestation of an opposite nature, either at the time or since, must, in my opinion, be deemed final, and binding alike upon the Colony and upon the HOME GOVERNMENT. The recent discovery of the Australian Gold Field, an event which could not be foreseen, has, besides, entirely changed the prospects of the colony, and the aspect of the Question. The most strenuous supporter of Transportation in 1850, may, without inconsistency, oppose it now. Under these altered circumstances, to re-agitate the question, could do no possible good, while it would certainly be productive of serious evils.

At a period like the present, the smouldering embers of dissension ought not to be raked up. Every true lover of his country should strive rather to heal differences, and to secure the services of those most conversant with public affairs. Highly important and difficult questions of municipal and general legislation, of fiscal and financial administration, and of general policy, will have to be determined. Questions of such a nature "call for the whole wisdom of the wisest." Shunning the perilous extremes of servile compliances, and wild popularity, our object should be, "to unite circumspection with vigour," and to bring to the support of order and good government, calm deliberation, practised judgment, unswerving loyalty, and a determination to maintain to the utmost the true interests of the colony.

My opinions upon other topics which have hitherto engaged the public attention, have been so often and so recently expressed, that it must be needless to trouble you with a repitition of them. If placed in the honourable but arduous office you design for me, I shall endeavour faithfully to perform its duties.

I have the honor to be, gentlemen,
Your faithful and obedient servant,
JAMES MACARTHUR.

To Charles Throsby, John Oxley, Henry Oxley, George Macleay, George Bransby, Henry Badgery, Esquires; Messrs. Henry Thompson, J. Lakeman, W. S. Mitchell, J. Lorimer, Thomas Brenan, John Marden, P. Keighran, A. G. Morley, C. Loseby, J. Bollard, W. Bollard, W. Buchan, J. Galvin, John Gray, John Waite, and the other Gentlemen signing the Requisition, and to the Electors generally of West Camden. :712

TO THE ELECTORS OF THE SYDNEY HAMLETS.

SO many of you have expressed yourselves favourable to my pretensions, that I beg leave to announce myself as a Candidate for your suffrages at the approaching Election for the Legislative Council.

Gentlemen, the constituency has been most actively canvassed four times. Busy politicians, who assume to themselves the right of regulating all our elections, and who by endeavouring to pledge the electors not infrequently produce that effect, have assured me that I am too late. But, believing that there is a sufficient number of your body, (who feel that the elective franchise is conferred, not as a private right to be used for private purposes, but as a delegated trust, to be exercised conscientiously for the benefit of all, remaining unpledged to decide the election at the hustings, I will put the matter to the test.

The last four months have advanced the prospects of the colony ten years—the next year will advance it twenty more. Such an advance will call forth the developement of new resources, must be attended with corresponding changes in our institutions, and will require all the care, all the energy and the information of men alike familiar with the blessings of civil and religious liberty, and the evils resulting from their want, and practically acquainted with free and liberal institutions at home and elsewhere.

There is no difficulty in predicting what these changes are to be. The gradual substitution, for our present anomalous Legislature, of one based on independent representation, two Houses, a Senate and a Council, and a Government constitutionally competent to decide upon, and responsible for, all measures not strictly Imperial.

Such changes will inevitably involve in their consideration every subject which can affect the colony.

In the discussion of all these matters differences of opinion must arise, but assuredly they may be carried on with more regard to the amenities of social life than has characterised some of the proceedings of our late Legislative Council. It would be my wish to see and to uphold a more dignified tone, for I know not any subject that may not be investigated without resorting to personalities, or any argument not weakened by intemperance.

It seems scarcely necessary to allude to the introduction of exiles; the possibility of such an event has passed away for ever.

Education shall ever receive my most strenuous support; I believe the more general it is, the more divested of sectarian differences, the more it will conduce to the well-being of the individual, and the welfare of the community; but if I cannot do all the good I wish, I will at least effect all that is in my power, and carry out in its most perfect integrity whatever system is adopted.

Educated in the mother country, my mind formed by the consideration of the sterling character of her institutions, I will support the most close and intimate connexion with Great Britain, and oppose every thing tending to weaken the tie between this colony and the Parent State.

I will afford you an opportunity of ascertaining more precisely my sentiments than an address of this nature can effect.

Such generally are my views; should they, when fully understood, be such as the majority of you approve, if placed in the proud position of your representative, I will always advocate them with zeal and independence, and with the candour and courtesy of a gentleman.

I remain,
Your very faithful and obedient servant,
MERION MORIARTY.

Birch Grove, August 6. 2694

TO THE ELECTORS OF THE NORTH-EASTERN BOROUGHS.

GENTLEMEN,—The kind and courteous manner in which I was received by you during my personal canvass demands my earliest and warmest acknowledgments. With very few exceptions I had an interview with every elector, and was gratified to find that the political sentiments contained in the addresses which I had the honour to deliver at Newcastle and Raymond Terrace, were generally approved of.

From the result of my canvass I have no doubt that should my opponent go to the poll I shall be returned by a very large majority, but in order to prevent any accident from over security, I hope all my friends will make arrangements which will enable them to be at the poll early on the day of election.

With grateful thanks for the warm interest which so many of your body have taken in promoting my interests, I beg to subscribe myself,

Your most obedient servant,
CHARLES KEMP.

TO THE ELECTORS OF THE EASTERN DIVISION OF THE COUNTY OF CAMDEN.

GENTLEMEN,—I have the honour, in announcing myself a candidate for the honour of representing you in the next Legislative Council, to afford that explanation of my opinions on questions of leading interest,—general and local, which you are entitled to require.

On the important subject of Religion, in the only particular in which it comes within the province of our Legislature, viz., as calling for aid from funds raised from colonists of various persuasions,—I approve of the Church Act of Sir Richard Bourke, and am prepared to carry it out in all its integrity, and with the strictest impartiality.

With respect to Education, I prefer the National System, deeming it in every way most suitable for our scattered population, at the same time I would not interfere with schools already established under the Denominational System.

The Transportation question appears to me to be set at rest. But if it should be mooted in any way in Council, I pledge myself to give my most strenuous opposition to the renewal, continuance, or introduction, of the system, under whatever name or form in any part of Australasia.

The reasons which inclined a portion of the colonists towards accepting it in the form offered by the Home Government, appears to me to exist no longer, under the altered circumstances and prospects of the colony,—while overwhelming reasons demanding its total abolition have been superadded to those which a majority of the colonists before thought to preponderate.

I am in favour of a reduction in the minimum price of Crown land to 5s. per acre, and as an encouragement to respectable emigrants of all classes, I am inclined to advocate a remission of an amount of purchase money equivalent to the expense of their passage.

I am prepared to concur in every legitimate effort to obtain for the colonial legislature a more unrestricted disposal of the revenue,—including that arising from the waste lands of the colony.

With respect to the local interests of the district, I regard the improvement of its roads and bridges as of paramount importance. I will do my utmost both to obtain as large a share of assistance from the revenue for this purpose as justice to other parts of the colony will admit, and also to apply it impartially throughout the entire district without unfair preference to any locality.

In conclusion, I have only to add, that I feel peculiarly identified with the interests of my adopted country, and of the district of Illawarra in particular. Possessing a considerable stake in it, gradually acquired and laboriously improved during a residence of nearly twenty-two years, I am intimately acquainted with all the difficulties common to myself and my fellow-settlers, as well as with the means by which they have been or are in progress of being, overcome, in our advance towards comfort and independence. If elected, I will endeavour to use this local experience for the benefit of the district, and its industrious, frugal, and enterprising inhabitants.

I have the honour to be, Gentlemen,
Your most obedient servant,
HENRY OSBORNE.

Marshall Mount, August 7. 2866

TO THE ELECTORS OF THE UNITED COUNTIES OF MURRAY AND ST. VINCENT.

GENTLEMEN,—Encouraged by the kind assurances of support which I have received from many of you, I beg leave to declare myself a candidate for the representation of the united counties of Murray and St. Vincent, in the new Legislative Council, in consequence of our late respected representative having expressed a wish to withdraw "for a time from that honorable but onerous office."

A flockmaster and a resident landholder, my interests are those of my fellow-colonists. During the last twelve years I have had occasion at public meetings to express my views and opinions frequently. I need not therefore now make professions as to my political principles. On one point only, I conceive it my duty to be explicit. If you do me the honour to return me as your representative, I shall enter the Legislative Council a consistent and resolute opponent of the revival of Transportation to New South Wales and the adjacent colonies in any shape or under any name whatsoever.

The great extent of the two counties, and the scattered state of our population will prevent my waiting personally upon the electors; but I shall be happy to meet such of you as can conveniently assemble at the principal polling places, on days to be hereafter appointed, and afford you an opportunity of questioning me as to my views on any subject of colonial importance.

I have the honour to be, Gentlemen, your most obedient servant,
CHARLES CAMPBELL.

As a Purifier of the Blood, in Spring and Summer Complaints, as well as all disorders arising from general derangement of the system, or an infection of the fluids, it has probably no superior. Thus, in Scrofula, Erysipelas, Sore Eyes, Quinsy, Sore Throat, Jaundice, Asthma, Eruptions of the Skin, Rheumatism, Ulcer Sores, Syphilitic Cases, Salt Rheum, Piles, Costiveness, and all Bowel Complaints, Scald Head, Spinal Complaints, and all diseases arising from the injudicious use of Mercury, General Debility of the whole system, also, Weak, Sour, and Irritable Stomachs, Dyspepsia, &c., it is one of the most remarkable medicines in existence. It will cure the Liver Complaint, Incipient Consumption, and all affections of the Lungs and Liver quicker and more thoroughly than any remedy I know of. It sweeps out the whole train of Coughs, Colds, Asthmatic and Bronchial Affections so completely and easily, that it astonishes and delights any person who uses it. In diseases of Children, and as a general Nursery Medicine, it meets with unqualified success, and saves the lives of thousands. It is particularly applicable to female complaints, hence, its value to married, as well as unmarried ladies in all their peculiar diseases.

In all diseases of the skin, where Blotches, Pimples, Sores, and Acrid Eruptions develope themselves, this Sarsaparilla seems to be a perfect antidote.

This Medicine improves with age, and when a hundred years old will be better than now, and can never sour or spoil. It is an invaluable Fall and Spring medicine, preventing and removing Bilious diseases, Jaundice, Sour Stomach, Chills and Fever, and Fevers of all kinds.

ASSIZE INTELLIGENCE.

GOULBURN CIRCUIT COURT.

THURSDAY, AUGUST 7.

BEFORE Mr. Justice DICKINSON and a Common Jury.

Joseph Woodfield, late of the Boro Inn, labourer, was indicted for the wilful murder of Thomas Hartneady, at Boro aforesaid, on the 29th day of April last, by striking, kicking, and beating him the said Thomas Hartneady in and upon the head, breast, stomach, and sides, as well as by casting and throwing him the said Thomas Hartneady upon the ground, thereby inflicting divers mortal wounds, bruises, and contusions, of which the said Thomas Hartneady then and there instantly died.

The prisoner pleaded not guilty; and was defended by Mr. Purefoy. Attorney—Mr. Walsh.

From the evidence for the prosecution in this case, it appeared that the deceased was a free emigrant, but recently arrived in the colony, and in the employment of the prisoner at the time he met with his death. On the day mentioned in the indictment, it appeared that there was a drinking party at the Boro Inn, which was kept by the prisoner Woodfield; and that the deceased, who had retired rather early to bed, was sent for by the prisoner's wife to join the party that were drinking, but deceased refused; a second message was then sent to him to come out, and he got up and joined the party. Shortly after deceased asked the prisoner if he had said that he (deceased) wanted to take the black man's money: prisoner denied that he had said so, on which the deceased replied "If I thought you had I would smash your face," on which prisoner and deceased immediately went out and fought for four or five minutes, when they were separated by a shepherd named Atkinson, who went between them and said "Come, don't be fools, that will do;" deceased, however, immediately ran to a heap of wood, picked up a billet about four or five feet long and four inches thick, and struck the prisoner across the left temple, cutting the flesh and causing effusion of blood: deceased and prisoner then commenced fighting again, and both fell; during the struggle prisoner kicked the deceased about the chest and sides, and struck him in the neck with his fist; after a short struggle prisoner returned to his house, and finding that the deceased did not come in, asked the shepherd Atkinson to come with him to assist Tom into the house; that he was very sorry for what had occurred, and was afraid that deceased would leave him in the morning; the prisoner, assisted by the shepherd, then carried the deceased into the house; he appeared quite insensible, and never spoke afterwards. An inquest was held on the body the following day, and from a post mortem examination made by Dr. Gerard, it was ascertained that death was caused by congestion of the brain, induced by violence and severe blows inflicted on the head and neck of the deceased.

The case for the Crown having closed, Mr. PUREFOY addressed the Jury at some length, contending that the quarrel, in which deceased lost his life was sought for and brought on by himself: that the original quarrel, from which they were separated by the witness Thomas Atkinson was at an end, when the deceased again renewed it by taking a piece of wood from the heap, and striking the prisoner across the temple, and drawing blood, and that the prisoner was then justified in resisting the attack made upon him, and even killing his assailant, if he had reasonable and probable cause to believe his life in danger.

Two witnesses were called, who gave the prisoner an excellent character. The ATTORNEY-GENERAL briefly replied, when his HONOR, having carefully summed up the evidence, the Jury retired for about twenty minutes, and returned to Court with a verdict of not guilty of murder, but guilty of manslaughter.

Sentence, two years' imprisonment in Goulburn Gaol.

John Drummy, late of Cooma, in the colony of New South Wales, labourer, was indicted for that he, on the 20th of June last, at Cooma aforesaid, two blankets of the value of 10s. each, of the goods and chattels of James Kerman, feloniously did steal, take, and carry away.

The prisoner was undefended.

From the evidence of the witnesses for the Crown, it appeared that the prisoner Drummy was in the habit of calling and sometimes staying a few days at the house of prosecutor, James Kerman, a publican, residing at Cooma. From certain information given to Mr. Kerman, he searched one of his bed-rooms on the 21st of June last, (to which the prisoner might have access), and missed a pair of blankets, immediately gave information to chief constable Worsley, who went in pursuit and apprehended the prisoner about 30 miles from Cooma, having in his possession a pair of blankets, which Mr. Kerman swore belonged to him. This was the case for the Crown.

The prisoner in his defence stated that Mr. Kerman was mistaken as to the blankets, that they were his own property, and that he purchased them a considerable time back, but that the witness who could prove the purchase had gone to the diggings, and he was unable to produce him.

The Jury, without leaving the box, found the prisoner guilty. Sentence, three years' hard labour on the roads or other public works of the colony.

Thomas Johnston, late of Goulburn, labourer, was indicted for that he, on the 4th of July, 1851, feloniously and burglariously did break and enter a certain building within the courtilage of one William Sowerby, with intent to steal the goods and chattels of him the said William Sowerby; and from the said building feloniously and burglariously did then and there steal, take, and carry away 300 lbs. weight of flour, value £5; 300 lbs. weight of pork, value £5; and 3 bags, of the value of 3s.; against the form of the statute, &c., &c., and against the peace, &c. From the evidence in this case it appeared that about the beginning of July last, a fat pig had been slaughtered at Mr. Sowerby's, and secured in a building in the yard, at the parsonage, used as a storehouse for such purposes. On the morning of the 5th of July, Mr. Sowerby discovered that the window of the storehouse had been wrenched off its hinges, the bolt forced back, and the fat pig gone. Information of the robbery was given without delay to Mr. M'Alister, chief constable at Goulburn, who, in a few days afterwards, went to the house of prisoner Johnston (who resides about two miles from Mr. Sowerby's), and on searching the premises found a quantity of fresh pork, cut up in pieces of 4lbs. and 6lbs. each, also a quantity of flour, and three flour bags; the bags were fully identified by William Batt, Mr. Sowerby's store-keeper; but the pork and flour could not be identified; prisoner told the chief constable that the property found was all his own, and that he earned it hard by his own honest labour. The strongest features in the evidence against the prisoner were, that the witness William Batt traced footsteps (the morning of the robbery) in the direction of the prisoner's house, and also saw the marks of flour and salt strewed on the ground in the same direction; besides these suspicious circumstances, a black mask (sufficiently large to cover the face) with two holes cut for the eyes, also, a large pistol loaded with ball, and some gunpowder, were found by the chief constable, M'Alister, in the prisoner's bed-room, the loaded pistol being concealed in a pillow in the same room.

The prisoner being called upon for his defence, stated that he knew nothing whatever about the robbery; that he was known to be a hard working, industrious man; and that as to the mask and pistol he never saw them before, and knew nothing about them. His HONOR summed up the evidence, carefully pointing out to the Jury the portions of the evidence which raised a presumption of guilt against the prisoner, and telling them that if upon the whole they entertained a fair and reasonable doubt, the prisoner would be entitled to an acquittal, but if no such doubt existed the Crown would be entitled to a verdict against the prisoner.

The Jury retired, and after a deliberation of twenty minutes returned to Court with a verdict of guilty.

Sentence, four years' hard labour on the roads or other public works of the colony.

FRIDAY.

James Johnston and Charles Brown, late of Berrima, labourers, were indicted for that they on the 10th of February last, at Balangla, in colony aforesaid, two oxen, of the value of £5, of the goods and chattles of one Benjamin Carter, then and there being found, feloniously did steal, take, and drive away.

The prisoners pleaded not guilty. Johnston was defended by Mr. Purefoy; attorney, Mr. Walsh.

This was an ordinary case of cattle stealing; it appeared from the eivdence for the Crown that about the 8th or 9th of February last, a bullock was missed from the run of the prosecutor, Benjamin Carter, near the Wollondilly; that in consequence of certain information, Mr. Carter obtained a search warrant and proceeded to the prisoner's house, accompanied by the Chief Constable of Berrima, Mr. Freer, on the 10th of last February, and on searching the premises, they found a hide in a cask of pickle (not concealed in any way) which Mr. Carter identified as the hide of his missing bullock; the prisoner Johnston was not at home at the time, but on the following morning went into Berrima and gave himself up; the next day the prisoner Brown was apprehended, at Piercy Flats, near the Cross Roads, when he informed the Chief Constable that he had exchanged ten head of cattle with the prisoner Johnston a day or two before, for two horses, and one of these was a bullock exactly answering the description of Mr. Carter's, the only difference being in the brand C B and not B C, and receipts for this exchange were produced by Brown.

This was the case for the Crown.

When His HONOR observed that it amounted to nothing more than a case of suspicion, and therefore recommended the Jury, if they took the same view of the case, to acquit both the prisoners.

Verdict—Not guilty. The prisoners were then discharged.

Joseph Battison Eston, late of Goulburn, labourer, was indicted for that he, on the 2nd day of June last, with force and arms at Veteran Flats, in the colony aforesaid, eight half-crowns, twenty shillings, forty sixpences, eighty three-penny bits, one bridle of the value of £5, one pistol, of the value of ten shillings, two ounces of gunpowder, of the property, goods, and chattles of one Martin Kellick, and two shirts, of the value of 4s., one pair of trousers of the value of 10s., and two figs of tobacco, of the value of 1s., of the property, goods, and chattles of one John Cavenagh, in the dwelling house of the said Martin Kellick, there situate, being found, did then and there feloniously steal, take, and carry away. The prisoner pleaded not guilty and was undefended.

From the evidence in this case it appeared that on the evening of the 2nd of June last, between the hours of seven and eight in the evening, two men entered the house of the prosecutor Martin Kellick, both armed with pistols, and having their faces covered with black crape; they immediately ordered Kellick and his servant man, John Cavenagh, to turn their faces towards the wall, and then tied Cavanah's hands behind his back; the prisoner at the bar then took up a bunch of keys from the table, and ordered Mrs. Kellick to light a candle, which he took with him into the room and opened the drawers, from which he took the money and other property mentioned in the information. Mrs. Kellick being sworn and examined, proved the circumstances under which the robbery was committed, and also positively swore to the identity of the prisoner Easton, and particularly from the fact of the thumb of the right hand being one joint shorter than that of the left.

In his defence the prisoner stated that he was in his master's hut the whole night of the 2nd of June, and never saw any of the witnesses before who swore against him. Prisoner then called three witnesses to prove his alibi, but none of them appeared.

His HONOR briefly summed up, when the Jury retired for half an hour, and on returning into Court found a verdict of guilty. Sentence, ten years' hard labour on the roads.

John Gilligan, late of Braidwood, in the colony of New South Wales, labourer, was indicted for that he, with force and arms, at Braidwood aforesaid, on the 24th of May, in the year 1847, in and upon one Leonard Shepherd, feloniously and violently did make an assault, and from the person and against the will of the said Leonard Shepherd, feloniously and violently did take ten cases of the value of 20s. each, ten boxes of the value of 20s. each, ten coats of the value of £5, ten pairs trousers of the value of £5, 100 yards of print of the value of £5, ten pairs blankets of the value of £5, ten bottles of gin of the value of £5, of the goods and chattels of one Henry Farmer, he the said John Gilligan being then and there armed with a certain offensive weapon, to wit a pistol.

Mr. PUREFOY appeared for the prisoner; attorney, Mr. C. H. Walsh.

The ATTORNEY-GENERAL stated that in consequence of the absense of two material witnesses he was unable to proceed with the trial, and that as the prisoner had only surrendered himself on the 12th April last, he was not entitled to bail, this being the first Circuit Court since his committal.

Mr. PUREFOY urged upon the Court that it would be a hardship to refuse the prisoner bail, after he had surrendered, and was now prepared to take his trial; besides which it appeared very improbable that the prisoner could be convicted at any time, as the Attorney-General stated no grounds to show that the necessary witnesses would be forthcoming at the next Circuit Court.

His HONOR refused the application for bail—and the prisoner was remanded to his former custody.

James Sinclair, late of Goulburn, labourer, was indicted for a common assault upon one James Reilly, a sheriff's officer, at Goulburn, on the 9th day of January last.

It appeared from the evidence of the witnesses, Carter and Reilly, that an execution had been issued against the defendant, to levy the sum of £71 12s. 10d., and that on the day named in the information the prosecutor Reilly (accompanied by Carter, the other officer) went to the residence of the defendant, who was at the time engaged writing in his office. On Reilly producing the Sheriff's warrant, the defendant Sinclair then said that Reilly ought not to have come there to annoy himself and family, but to have gone to the office at the mill, where he would at once have paid the amount. Reilly then said, it would save much trouble if defendant would then pay the amount of the writ, on which the defendant seized a gun, and presented it at Reilly, threatening to shoot him, unless he immediately left the house. Reilly immediately went away and lodged an information for the assault.

The defendant called two witnesses to prove that that the prosecutor Reilly had presented his pistol at him before he took down the gun, and that he only used it in self-defence.

The Jury retired for about twenty minutes, and brought in a verdict of not guilty, when the defendant was discharged.

REGINA v. DODD.

Michael Dodd, late of Wheoo, in the colony of New South Wales, was indicted for that he, on the first of April last, at the Fish River, in the colony aforesaid, two cows, of the value of 40s. each, and two heifers, of the value of 40s. each, of the goods and chattels of one John Grogan, then and there being found, feloniously did steal, take, and drive away.

The prisoner pleaded not guilty, and was defended by Mr. Purefoy; attorney, Mr. C. H. Walsh.

It appeared from the evidence in this cases that in the month of April, 1849, the prosecutor Grogan made an exchange with the prisoner of some cattle, giving him a horse for seven head, viz.:—four cows and three bullocks; that the cattle so exchanged were driven into a paddock at Dodd's, and transferred to the prosecutor Grogan, who allowed them to run with prisoner's cattle until April last, when he found that some of them (four head) had been sold to a Mr. Maurice, near Yass, by the prisoner Dodd, on which he went to prisoner and asked him why he had sold his cattle? to which prisoner replied that he would give others in lieu of; then with this Grogan would not be satisfied, and in some time afterwards he went to Mr. Oakes, a magistrate, and lodged an information against the prisoner for cattle stealing, on which a warrant issued, and the prisoner was apprehended, and committed for trial.

Mr. PUREFOY addressed the Jury for the defence, contending, first, that there was no deportation, as the cattle were left by Grogan in the prisoner's possession; and secondly, that there was a failure of proof as to the cattle sold by the prisoner to Maurice being any of those which Grogan procured in exchange from the prisoner.

The Jury retired for a quarter of an hour, and then returned into Court with a verdict of guilty. Sentence, two years' imprisonment with hard labour in Goulburn Gool.

(From the Times, April 24.)

Wednesday Evening.

CONSOLS opened this morning at their old quotation of 97¼ to ⅜, but they subsequently experienced a decline, and having touched 97⅛, they closed at 97⅛ to ¼. For the account the only price marked was 97⅛, at which there were sellers at the termination of business. Bank Stock left off 211 to 212; Reduced, 96⅝ to ½; Three-and-a-Quarter per Cents., 97⅞ to 98; Long Annuities, 7⅞; India Stock, 260 to 263; and Exchequer-bills, 54s. to 57s. premium.

In foreign stocks there was no alteration of the slightest importance. The bargains comprised Chilian Three per Cents., at 64; Danish Five per Cents., 102; Mexican 35⅛ ⅜; Peruvian Deferred, 39½ ⅝; Portuguese Converted, 34½; ditto Four per Cents., 33½ and 33 for money, and 33 to ½ for the account; Russian Five per Cents., 112; and the Three per Cents., 99⅝ ½; Spanish Five per Cents., 19⅝; Passive, 5⅝; and the Three per Cents., 39⅝; Venezuela, 33; Belgian Four-and-a-Half per Cents., 94⅞ ⅞; and Dutch Four per Cents., 90⅛.

The corn-market was very dull this morning at former prices

The mercantile letters from the continent continue to denote an inanimate condition of general business, similar to that which prevails here. This is particularly the case as regards Paris, whence, however, the quotation of the rate of exchange is again very firm. According to a telegraphic despatch received in that capital yesterday from Madrid, the insurrection in Portugal had entirely failed, and General Saldanha had fled into Spain.

Since the 15th instant the Paris mail leaves that capital at 7·30 instead of 8 p.m., and arrives at Calais at 2·10 a.m. An extra mail train from Dover has been started at 5·20 a.m., reaching London at 7·30; and the result is that the desired object of having the French mail here in time for the first delivery, and morning's mail to the provinces, has been effected. Meanwhile the relative position of the two routs by Boulogne and Calais remains unchanged; and the same train which arrives at Calais at 10 minutes past 2 in the morning, reaches Boulogne at 20 minutes to 1. On each road the number and speed of the trains have been increased, with a view to the accommodation of an extended traffic, and it is said the approaching season will certainly witness facilities for the journey between London and Paris, which would have been scarcely credited even a short time back.

The Committee of Spanish America Bondholders have furnished a translation of the message to Congress of the new President of Venezuela, J. G. Monagas, on the subject of the debt of that republic. He states the claims of the foreign creditors to be among the points calling for particular attention, and considers it essential, in undertaking its immediate arrangement, that a proper representative should be accredited. The position of the country in other respects as regards foreign Powers is also described as requiring a step of this nature, in order to restore and maintain the relations which she ought to cultivate, and for the purpose, therefore, of appointing one or two legations to Europe he asks a credit of 25,000 dollars. The entire tone of the message indicates a sense of the injury which Venezuela has experienced by her suspension of dividends, as well as by the infamous insolvent law of March, 1849, which rendered impracticable the collection of debts by foreign houses, and drew forth a notification from Lord Palmerston that he would hold the Government responsible for any losses our merchants might sustain. The message was accompanied likewise by a decree establishing stringent regulations as to the appropriation of Customs' revenues and the gradual pro rata discharge of certain floating liabilities both on home and foreign account.

Advices from Hayti, viâ the United States, to the 17th of March, represent that in consequence of the alleged discovery of a conspiracy several persons had been arrested and condemned to death by court-martial, the late Chief Justice and one of the three Cabinet Ministers being among the number. These proceedings, however, had been annulled, and a new trial ordered, the result of which had not yet transpired. The parties are blacks, and their object, it is said, was to destroy the whites and mulattoes. It is added that the efforts of the United States, England, and France, to bring about a pacific understanding between the Emperor Soulouque and the Dominicans had not thus far been attended with much success, but the Legislature were to assemble on the 25th to consider the offer of mediation. The market for provisions was favourable, and the price of coffee was well sustained, owing to anticipations of a crop below the average.

At a late meeting, held in Edinburgh, to consider the means of alleviating Highland destitution, the Rev. Mr. George stated, to show the importance of the Highlands, that Skye had furnished since the Peninsular War no fewer than twenty-one lieutenant-generals and major-generals, forty-eight lieutenant-colonels, 600 majors, captains, and subalterns, 10,000 foot soldiers, 120 pipers, four governors of British colonies, one governor-general, one adjutant-general, one chief baron of England, and one judge of the Court of Session.

In consequence of the misapprehension that has existed respecting the Queen's visit in state on the opening day of the Great Exhibition in Hyde Park, we have made inquiries, and are enabled to state that her Majesty's gracious consent to inaugurate the opening of the Exhibition by her presence will not have the effect of excluding any single person, who was previously considered to be entitled to admission to the interior of the building. The holders of season tickets will certainly be admitted, according to the terms upon which they have purchased their right; and we have further the satisfaction to add, that it is probable the right of admission will be extended to exhibitors, who will value the privilege all the more for the advantage and pleasure of being allowed to join in the universal tribute of affection to our beloved Sovereign and her illustrious Consort, to whom this great and beneficial experiment is so largely indebted.—Observer, April 20.

STEAM TO AUSTRALIA.

(From the Liverpool Albion, March 31.)

NOTWITHSTANDING the anticipations we expressed, a few weeks ago, that the negotiations so long pending with the Government respecting steam communication with the Australian Colonies would be speedily concluded, it will be seen by the debate on Lord Jocelyn's motion, in the House of Commons, on Thursday night, that the whole question has been referred, in connexion with the Indian packet-service, to a select committee. This proceeding has come upon us the more unexpectedly as the authority upon which we founded our announcement was derived from the most unquestionable source; and we have good reason to know, that the matters had so far approximated to a definite conclusion, that the inquiry from Downing-street was, "How soon can you put a steamer on?" Now, so far back as the year 1848, Earl Grey wrote to Sir Charles Fitz Roy, directing that the sum of £6000, voted by the Legislative Council, should at once be paid into the Treasury, as steamers were about to start. Various rumours and conjectures are afloat as to the influences which have produced this sudden change in the determination of the Chancellor of the Exchequer. The member for North Staffordshire would impute it to a fear of further collision with the East India Company respecting the surrender of the Suez and Bombay line at a time when Parliamentary votes must be propitiated; whilst knowing ones in the city hint, that the reference of the subject to a committee is but an expedient to facilitate the objects of the New Eastern Steam Association, which is known to be espoused, in opposition to Peninsular and Oriental Company, by the "Austrian Lloyds" and the India-house, and whose most active functionary has risen from the ashes of a defunct company and been installed in office, not only from his former experience, but the influence which he is said to possess through a relative in the Colonial Office. Indeed, if we were to judge of the extent of that influence by the family's coquetry with a secretary of the Treasury which took place in the lobby of the house, we are informed, on Thursday night, we should be inclined to say that the adoption of the proposals of the New Eastern Association may already be considered as a res judicata, and that the ordeal of a committee, as far as its interests are concerned, must be mere matter of form. We have heard it further stated, in a quarter upon which strict reliance ought to be placed, that there is at this moment an offer before the Government from the East India Company to carry on the packet service to Australia by their Bombay steam navy until the Government have determined upon the proposals of private companies; and there are not a few who attribute this offer from Leadenhall-street as originating in a desire to fill up the gap until the New Eastern Associations have funds, vessels, and appliances ready to carry out the service.

Taken as a whole, Lord Jocelyn's committee may be considered as pretty fairly constituted; but it behoves all who are interested in the Australian colonies, and who desire that accelerated intercourse with them should no longer be postponed to suit the views of particular companies, to watch vigilantly the proceedings, and protect themselves and the public from the exercise of undue influence, whether emanating from Downing-street or elsewhere.

A new project for a continuance of the line of screw steamers, already commenced to the Cape of Good Hope, by a branch to Sydney, has been lately mooted, and from the manner in which it has been taken up there are great hopes of its success, which will in no degree militate against the success of any other; quite the contrary.

FASHIONS FOR APRIL.

(From the Gazette of Fashion for April.)

GENTLEMEN'S MORNING DRESS STYLE.

COATS.—Frock-coats have now resumed their former place as the fashionable garment for morning dress, to the exclusion of the variety of forms of lounge or loose jackets, which, for a time, have superseded them.

The frock is better also than the evening or dress coat, as when buttoned up it protects that valuable part of a man, the chest, and also is a complete garment. The triangular opening in front of the coat and vest is an absurdity, as it leaves unprotected from cold and wet the part most requiring it, while pictorially, the regularly defined patch of white seen through it is always offensive. The only merit of the exposure of the linen worn under man's dress is that it has contributed to cleanliness, which belongs to morals rather than aesthetics.

The modern dress-coat is evidently derived from the frock, or something like it, by turning back the skirts. The remains of this process may be seen in the buttons, which, without serving any useful purpose, continue to decorate the coat skirts in many military uniforms and liveries, and still adhere to the skirts of an ordinary dress-coat; but may be more distinctly traced in the well-known portraits of Charles XII. of Sweden, in which the white facing is seen buttoned back upon the blue cloth which forms the outside of the coat skirts.

The dress-coat is certainly the most undesirable of the two, either for utility or appearance, and so thought George IV., who in his latter days carried his aversion so far as to banish it entirely from his back and presence; for a time during which the King and the persons immediately about him wore a frock-coat; but the public did not follow the Royal lead, and the swallow-tails still flutter behind the wearer of an evening coat.

VESTS.—Waistcoats do not call for much reprobation, except in the matter of the already white triangles, in which they are in company with the coats; but a good long waistcoat buttoned up to the throat is a very useful and unexceptionable piece of attire. A few years ago people wore them in shades of colour, and all kinds of stuffs, silks, and velvet. Now, however, black is your only wear, with an occasional license to assume the white vest. For dress figured silks, embroidered quiltings, and cassimeres, are the most prevailing materials.

TROUSERS are so sensible and convenient a form of attire that little can be said against them; it is a form of covering for the legs well fitted for the inhabitants of a cold and variable climate, and hardly differs from what may be seen on the figures of the Gauls on Trajan's Column, and other monuments of antiquity. In practical convenience they far surpass their shorter rivals, which require continuation by stockings to complete the purpose of clothing the leg. Buttons at the knee are a great nuisance, and probably chiefly contributed to the melancholy determination of a certain gentleman in the last century, who found his existence insupportable, and put an end to it with his own hand. "Life," he said, "was made up of nothing but buttoning and unbuttoning;" and so he shot himself one morning in his dressing-gown and slippers, before the intolerable burthen of the day commenced. Trowsers are not worn loose, and from the character of the fashionable patterns, they are for morning wear nearly straight down the legs.

Dress trousers are worn moderately close to the leg and body.

Pantaloons, once so fashionable for full dress, is being revived at the court balls. To a gentleman possessing a well-made leg, this garment is a becoming costume for dress.

COURT DRESS.—This style of dress, which is the only costume in which a private gentleman—not holding any official appointment to which a distinctive uniform is attached—is permitted to appear at Her Majesty's drawing rooms, levees, at the official dinners of the Cabinet Ministers, or at the ceremonial dinners given during the Parliamentary season by the Speaker of the House of Commons, we shall give a description of for the benefit of our numerous readers, many of whom, attracted by the wonder of modern wonders, will leave their seats and country mansions for the great metropolis, who are not accustomed to make a periodical residence in town, and who during their stay may be pleased to avail themselves of the opportunity to become participators in the pageant of the Court by their presence on the occasions we have alluded to.

The coat is made of claret cloth, with a stand-up collar, pointed flaps, and cuffs, and lined with white satin, with buttons of a large size of richly cut steel.

Brussels lace ruffles are sewn inside the bottom of the cuff.

A black silk bag wig is attached to the top of the back of the collar.

The waistcoat is made of white corded silk, the edges and flaps embroidered in coloured silk and spangles, or of cloth the same colour as the coat, lined with white silk.

Breeches are made of claret cloth, steel buttons, and buckle.

It is usual to wear the sword in a frog belt, instead of one with slings.

Cut steel buckles are worn in the shoes.

For gentlemen connected with the law the whole suit is composed of black cloth. The sword is also black, as are the buckles and buttons, with linings.

Clergymen wear all black and weepers on the cuffs, instead of ruffles; also a three cornered hat; the sword is dispensed with.

DISMISSAL OF ONE OF HER MAJESTY'S CHAPLAINS.

IN the Morning Advertiser we stated that her Majesty had dismissed one of the Royal Chaplains, in consequence of certain representations made by the honorable and reverend gentleman relative to the practices of the Court. It appears that the chaplain undertook, in addition, the somewhat unpleasant task of lecturing his Royal Highness Prince Albert on the subject of the proposed great exhibition. The following letter was the first the honorable and reverend Arthur Perceval (brother to the Earl of Egmont) addressed to the Prince:—

SIR,—May it please your Royal Highness to allow me to address you on a subject deeply concerning, in my mind, the welfare of her Majesty and of her children, and of the nation, connected with a project of which your Royal Highness has the credit of being the chief promoter. I allude to the proposed Exhibition of 1851.

As far as yet appears, the sole object of that Exhibition is to set forth the skill and ingenuity, the arts and sciences, the intelligence and power of man: to connect all this with the glory of Him who made him, or in any way to hallow or consecrate such a manifestation of man by taking care as openly to "give to the Lord the honour due unto His name," does not appear to have crossed the imagination, or entered into the contemplation of the promoters of the undertaking. Yet, if the Exhibition shall be set out and carried through with this apparent disregard of things sacred and of the Supreme, its resemblance to Nebuchadnezzar's pride and Belshazzar's feast will be too striking not to cause reasonable uneasiness to those who believe the Scriptures, who fear God, who love their country, and desire the preservation and well-being of that gracious person who has been called to preside over its councils.

To entertain such a fear, and not to seek to remove the cause of it, would be no manifest a dereliction of duty, especially in one holding the position towards the Queen and the nation which it is my lot to do, that, whether what I say shall find response in your Royal Highness's heart or not, I feel sure that you will not consider apology to be due for this communication, there being no one else to whom I conceive it could be made with more or equal propriety. I will only add, that while I should have considered this communication premature, if not vexatious, were I unprepared to suggest means for removing the cause for apprehension above stated. In the event of that apprehension appearing reasonable to your Royal Highness and others, to tender such a suggestion without your Royal Highness's previous sanction or request, would seem to me to savour a presumption for which it would not be easy to offer legitimate excuse. I have the honour to be, sir, your Royal Highness's obedient, faithful, and humble servant,

ARTHUR PERCEVAL,
Chaplain to Her Majesty the Queen.

This letter was not acknowledged, and some time afterwards the honorable and reverend gentleman sent the following:—

TO THE ACQUERY IN WAITING.

SIR,—As a letter of mine addressed to his Royal Highness the Prince Albert, on the subject of the Great Exhibition, has not been acknowledged, I request to be informed whether that letter was placed in the hands of His Royal Highness. I am, sir, your obedient servant,

ARTHUR PERCEVAL.

No direct answer was returned to this note, but it was intimated to Mr. Perceval that he had her Majesty's permission to retire from the office he held as one of the royal chaplains; and the honorable and reverend gentleman accordingly tendered his resignation, which was accepted.

On the subject under consideration Mr. Perceval has printed, for private consideration amongst the principal members of the high church party, the following remarks:—

Such is the regard now paid to religion, to religious remonstrances and suggestions, and to the ministers of religion in the high places of Britain. Had his Royal Highness condescended to acknowledge my communication, and to invite suggestion, the plan which I was prepared to communicate was—That the opening of that exhibition should be by a day of national humiliation and deprecation of the wrath of God, which to no impartial bystander will seem an unreasonable or uncalled-for suggestion, seeing that the first ecclesiastical act of her Majesty's reign was the bill of pains and penalties against the clergy (1 Vic., c. 20), to deter them from fulfilling their ordination vows in preserving sacred the rites of matrimony; and the last movement, quoad religionem, which marked her Majesty's reign in 1850, has been founding in Ireland, the terra sancta of Europe (whose hallowed associations supersede those of any other country out of Palestine), an university without any provision for Christian instruction therein; while throughout the whole of her reign, to the religion as by law established, frowns, oppressions, suspensions of constitutional liberties, and every vexation, internal as well as external, have been awarded; while favour, and patronage, and encouragement, have been reserved for the Jew, the Jesuit, and the infidel—to the second of these to such an extent, that the imperial crown of Britain has been, by her Majesty's ministers (e. g., Earl of Clarendon's letter to Archbishop Murray) placed as submissively, in effect, at the foot of the Pope, as it was, in very deed, placed at the foot of the Pope's legate, by the Sovereign in person, in the reign of King John; and with a like result, the Papal foot has spurned both the officers and their offering.

BAROMETERS FOR THE CRYSTAL PALACE.—Amongst the Liverpool contributors to the Great Exhibition are Messrs. Gray and Keen, the eminent opticians, who have prepared three barometers, the design and construction of which are novel and beautiful in the extreme. The first barometer consists of a design for naval institutions, representing an anchor and a cable. The flukes of the anchor support the dial, whereon is engraved a centre, consisting of Britannia borne on a sea horse, accompanied with water nymphs and tritons; and the surrounding letters, indicative of the state of the weather, assume the characters in coils of rope. The set-hand is moved by a brass steering-wheel, through which are seen mother-of-pearl points of the compass. The indicative hand consists of a trident and coils of rope springing from the globe, with equator and meridian lines. It is a fac simile of the massive one presented to the Sailor's Home by these gentlemen. The second and third are of the Gothic order, illustrative of the curvilinear and angular, the former having a most elaborate dial, in which architecture of the florid style is represented, and letters are also introduced from Mr. Gray's new Gothic alphabet. The base is a cross, typical of the support that order received from Christianity. The third has also a richly ornamented disc, and the base on which it rests forms a beautiful folinated bracket.

THE PHILOSOPHY OF ADVERTISING.—If a chap was to fall into a well, up to his neck, I kinder reckon he might shiver till he shook his teeth out, without any one coming to his aid, unless he sung out "Murder," or something else, so as to alarm his wife, and bring her to rescue. Just so it is in regard to merchandise. A man may have his shop full of goods; but if no one knows it, what does it do to him? He may have two or three, or a dozen local customers; but to fetch a crowd he must call a crowd, and the only way to call 'em is to sound the news in that etarnal trumpet—the newspaper! Advertising goods is jest like snorin', or takin' a cryin' baby to church. If you sleep in church and don't snore, how's folks on the back seat or on the gallery to know that you are there? and in regard to the baby, folks would never know you could raise one, if, when nurse takes him to church, he didn't begin to let off steam. But when he yells out good and strong, everybody, parson and all, feel mity good; they look at him and say to themselves, "Fine baby that, by hokey! a regular young rhinossercow, by gum!" The more he bellers the more people know it, the more they think about him. And on the same principle exactly, the more noise you make in a newspaper's columns, the more people think about you; they read, mark, learn, and inwardly digest what you say, and then they go and see you. One would imagine that a chap who never advertises his goods had stole 'em somewhere, and was afraid the owner would as soon as he seen them advertised, come and claim his property; there may be such a thing. A man who is afraid to advertise is afraid to look an honest public in the face—that's veracity; and they are just as feered of him. I'm always suspicious of a chap that has a store full of goods and never spends a cent in makin' people aware of it; he is either a big fool or a big knave. When such a'coon is lucky enough to get a good customer, he'd ort to take a daggrytipe of him sure, for it aint likely he'll see him agin in a hurry; for you see the man that don't advertise never sells goods twice to the same person; he sells so little that he has to charge like thunder to be able to live. He is so stingy that he would let his baby out to a beggar at a penny a day, and if he ever gave a blind man a cent it would be sure to be a bad one. His store smells so musty with his old six-year-old, moth eaten, fly specked, old fashioned goods, that it is enough to knock a negro down, to go into it, let alone a lady. You see, goods is like gals; they must go when they are in the fashion, and good lookin', or else a yoke of oxen wouldn't draw 'em off afterwards. The man that advertises most does most business, because he don't make one stock to last one lifetime. I know a merchant of this deestrict who has imported three different batches of goods within a year from Europe—and none of your small schooner loads either, each time—and now he's nearly sold out again. How does he and his partner get rid of so many goods? They advertise more than all the others put together, that's the how, I can prove it. If you want to borrow money—if you want to lend money—if you want a farm to rent—if you have one to sell—advertise. If your hoss, pig, cow, colt, sheep, oxen, or husband go astray, advertise them right off, and not run the chance of losin' them altogether, or havin' to pay as much as they are worth in charges for their keep. If you are a shoemaker, tailor, blacksmith, wagonmaker, or any kind of useful mechanic, show people that you are not ashamed of being a mechanic, by advertising. If you keep a hotel, make it known. When people see a man advertise, they know he is a business man. The world is full of folks who want. Some want to sell, some want to buy; and the only way to meet these wants and make money is to advertise. Advertising is like honesty—it pays well if followed up. Merchants think nothing of paying forty dollars for one sign, with nothing but their name on it. Well, what do you think of havin' two thousand signs a week in a newspaper? In it you can show your whole establishment to the country every week. If you are wise, just rub your eyes, and go to work and advertise.—Yankee Doodle, in Niagara Mail.

"UP WITH THE LARK."—"What makes you up so late, Sir?" said a father to his son, who made his appearance at the breakfast table about ten o'clock. "Late! Why, Father, I was up with the lark." "Well, then, Sir, for the future dont remain up so long with the larb, but come down a little earlier to breakfast."—Punch.
